

Classic Navy Is Biggest Color In Fashion News

TORONTO (CP) — Classic navy will return to the Canadian fashion scene for spring. Although no one color will be dominant, "the biggest color news is the return of navy in coats and suits," Vivian Wilcox, fashion editor of Chatelaine and Style told buyers gathered here for the 14th Ontario market here Monday.

Three groups of colors will replace the hot pinks and purples of the past season. They are the neutrals, pastels and a red, white and blue combination. With the stress off color, clothes will become curvier and feature more details. Ruffles, fringes and loops appear on summer dresses and there are a lot of prints. The newest prints are flat, stylized patterns known as "art nouveau."

The neutrals, principally beige are shown in rustic or homespun fabrics.

PASTEL PASTELS
The pastel colors for spring are blue, pink, green and yellow. The touted peach and apricot tones have not turned up but may appear later for summer, Miss Wilcox said.

The most significant coat shape for spring curved close to the body with seaming at the bust to give a conclusive look to the midriff. The narrow collar was set away from the neck and was notched. Another new shape was the fitted bodice with a clearly defined waist and full skirt. The sleeves of both were narrow.

Most suits were shown with short jackets that had either small collars or not at all. Longer jackets were available for taller women and many had self-tie belts.

New in the casual field was the hipster, a low-slung pant without a waistband. Some were shown with midriff-bearing tops.

Household Hint

Encourage your child to develop the habit of tilting his book at an angle toward the eyes when reading. At desk or study table he can prop his book against another, or use a book holder designed to hold the book at a correct angle.

It's best to alternate pairs of shoes, wearing one pair on day while the other airs. Not only does this give shoes a chance to air and freshen, but it preserves the leather, more than doubling their life.

ELLEN'S DIARY

We Bid A Fond Farewell To Our Childhood Home

The passing of a dear one or friend occasions its changes. There is a loved smile missing, a chair vacant. And it may be the lights and the hearthfire of a home go out. And in consequence something precious is gone from our life and living. Friend I love, who has been taken into the brown bosom of the earth, a part of me has been buried there; but the contribution of their being, of happiness, strength, and understanding, remains to sustain me in an altered world.

And so sustained, we of the family recently bereaved, find ourselves in that altered world to which like others, similarly bereft we must now adjust.

Today, in a quiet which left us for a time to be its sole occupant, we said good-bye to our childhood home. Not that we shall never again come happily to it, continuing on as it has, and will, in the family name. At the same time for us the old days and the olden ways there have definitely reached an end. So in the deep silence of a house whence for a while the heart was vanished, we bade it a fond farewell. No tears welled. But let no one who has not experienced the like, think such to be an easy task. No matter that one has a much loved home of her own. She can never find in that her wondering magical little girl years.

We climbed the easy ascent of stair to visit the rooms above, especially that we knew best. Wide windowed, it admits the beams of the morning sun. It looks down on the orchard where in the long ago, Spring turned its full rows of trees into choice bowers of bloom. Along its far side a little brook ran (and runs) in a silver stream to the river, but kept for small maids to thread in with their dreams, the tunes the spring-peppers played.

If one stopped to arrange her beads before the mirror in that room on a sunny morning, she could hear from the school, pealing forth the summons which warned her it was high time to be on the beaten footpath by the roadway which led up the slope to its door.

Adjoining this bedroom is that which looks toward the shore. It was to these eaves the winds were wont to bring their complaints at times and relate also tales of wide reaches of wave set waters, and of those whose business it was to sail along its busy lanes. From there we looked down to the old fields we knew, where in yonder years we found our four-leafed clovers; and to the lane where, with other maids, we loitered telling off laughingly some daisy's petals, in the young of the summery days. Here or there were the fields, where in time we helped at some seasonal planting or harvesting in a happy company of family and friend.

We looked into the master-bedroom where of old the sound of the first morning-steps on its threshold indicated another day had come. We stopped at the boys' rooms and fancied the teasing chuckle of the one now no more. And turning away, remembered what a well-ordered house and home this had been.

Down stairs, . . . but Until tomorrow — — Diary-Good-night.

Spring Styles Bring Back Old Time Girl

By JOY MILLER
NEW YORK (AP) — This spring a woman will look like the kind of girl dad might remember, although junior is possibly too young.

She'll have curves in the right places, softness in mood, a freedom of movement, a waistline as high as her spirits.

At least that's the good word that Adele Simpson, Harry Frechtel and Guy Douvier of Christian Dior-New York put forth in the first afternoon show of the New York Couture group's week-long parade.

The underpinnings may have been knocked from a prevailing thought of some psychologists: That an unconscious motive in fashion design is to make women helpless, hampered in movement, handicapped in trying to undertake the pursuits of men.

If anybody is going to feel helpless, it will be those who first look upon the New womanliness rampant this spring — or just possibly, when they first look at the price tag.

Anyway, you can't believe Adele Simpson would be a partner in any such conspiracy against her own kind. Mrs. Simpson goes out of her way to facilitate the modern woman's movement.

St. Pius X Parish Council Holds Meeting

The regular meeting of the St. Pius X parish council of the Catholic Women's League was held on Jan. 7. The president, Mrs. Matthew Lee, was in the chair.

The correspondence was read by Mrs. John Thompson and included several thank you notes and a letter from Mrs. Herbert McQuaid, provincial convener of Our Lady's Missionaries, explaining the work of the missionaries in Japan and Africa and asking the members to offer their prayers that God will continue to inspire generous souls to work for the foreign missions.

The treasurer's report read by Miss Reta Gaudet showed a substantial bank balance.

Mrs. Fred Driscoll was appointed to represent the CWL at the council meetings of the newly formed Layman's Association.

It was decided to change the regular meeting night from Sunday to a suitable weekday evening, as it was the general feeling that it would be more convenient to a greater number of members.

ets are rarely cluttered with buttons.

Her costumes have subtle flare, suit skirts move lightly, redingotes curve softly over pretty silk dresses.

Consistent with the trend are Harry Frechtel's gently fitted clothes. Jackets hug closer and closer to the body, suit skirts wrap to the side or have front panels.

Frechtel uses handwoven blue silks from India and linen from Ireland in suits, Swiss cotton brocade in two-piece dresses, French fabrics and synthetics from Italy in shaped or bulky coats.

In his elegant collection for Dior, Guy Douvier let the high-bosomed princess, sweeping in unbelted at the waist and out at the hem, rule for both day and evening. Some evening dresses, however, are flounced and ruffled.

Douvier makes much of tunics and redingotes; "use swirling green handkerchief skirt in done all the way around in triangles.
