NEW YORK, Oct. 27.

A Dublin special says: Ireland has not been in such an excited state for many years, and Dublin, which was slow to action, is now roused with the expectation of a stirring winter. All feel that the country is on the eve of a grave crisis. The agitation has become more than an agitation. It is open social revolt against a movement to crush the ruling class of Ireland by intimidation and force. There is nothing to be compared with it since the French revolution. The prosecutions are only intensifying the bitter feeling of the agitators and drawing to their side many who have hitherto disapproved of their course.

At the Land League meeting on Tuesday Dillon presided, and all reporters and correspondents were closely questioned before being allowed to remain. Dillon made a long speech, defending the policy of the League and replying to accusations that the League is responsible for outrages. Mr. Egan moved the following resolution: "That in the face of the threatened prosecution of members of the Land League by the English Government, we call on the Irish race all the world over to answer such coercive measures by resolute organization for the purpose of defending the principles and people of Ireland, and ardently request Michael Davitt to remain in America for the purpose of protecting the great and extensive movement among the United States. The resolution was adopted.

A London despatch says W. E. Forster denies having resigned as Chief Secretary for Ireland, and states that the members of the Cabinet are united on the question of the policy of coercion in Ireland.

NEW YORK, Oct. 27.

The Irish National Land League of America has issued an address to the friends of Ireland in America, asking aid which can be forwarded direct to the Land League of Dublin, or through the Rev. Lawrence Walsh, Treasurer of the American Land League, Waterbury, Conn.; Patrick Ford, of the Irish World; J. Boyle O'Reilly, of the Boston Pilot.

LONDON, Oct. 25.

Mr. Parnell, speaking at a banquet at Galway to-day, said: "I feel convinced that if ever you call upon your countrymen in America for help, and show them that there is a fair chance of success, you will have their trained and organized assistance for breaking the British yoke." Matthew Harris, one of the speakers at the land meeting at Galway yesterday, asked whether it were better that one bad man be shot or hundreds of families be driven from Ireland, and said that after witnessing the eviction of farmers he had resolved that if farmers shot landlords like partridges he would never say a word against it. His speech was received with cheers. He then proceeded to denounce an agent by name, but was mildly rebuked by the chairman of the meeting. Mr. O'Donnell has joined the Land League, and in consequence is threatened with Government prosecution. The Times, in a leading article, this morning, summarizes Mr. Parnell's argument in his speech yesterday at Galway as meaning that crime and outrage are justified by the determination of the Government to keep the peace and by the refusal of the House of Lords to pass the bill for compensation for disturbance in Ireland, and says: "It is impossible to mistake the meaning of such an argument or the purpose of the man who uses it. The condition of Ireland and the temper of the men who are criminally misleading the people calls for instant attention."

The French ultra-radical press has of late turned its attention on several occasions to the discussion of the Irish question. But now a review of the question comes from a different source, and, being distinguished from the opinions referred to by its perfect impartiality, merits considerable attention. The "Republique Francaise" discusses the relations between England and the sister isle in the following terms:—"England has, at the present moment, two weighty affairs on her hands—the evacuation of Afghanistan and the pacification of Ireland. It is decidedly easier to enter Afghanistan than to leave it, and it is apparently easier to quit Afghanistan than to satisfy Ireland. The government is full of good intentions toward the Irish, which fact does not prevent the agrarian agitators from making use of the most approbrious epithets in regard to the ruling powers. The Irish intoxicate themselves in words and become insurgents in speech. Indeed, if the authorities looked closely into the matter they would discover the germs of insurrection among the unhappy peasants who refuse either to pay their rents or to leave their holding. Here and there a landowner is murdered, a few farm-houses are burned, cattle are mutilated and the country is terror-stricken. In a word, Ireland resembles more and more a field of insurrection, and one cannot help asking whether one day the British government, notwithstanding its antipathy to measures of violence will not be forced to have recourse to martial law in order to prevent serious disorder. Several remedies have been attempted, such as the buying up of the land for the benefit of the farmers but these endeavors were frustrated by the hopeless poverty of these men, whose impetuosity precludes even the scheme of purchasing the land by a slightly increased rent, regularly paid for a few years. In order to arrive at a satisfactory result the first step taken must be that of raising the moral standard of the masses of the Irish nation. The agitators of the Land League would find in so doing a more worthy labor and one of greater use to the country than the work of barren hatred they are pursuing at present. In other countries than Great Britain violence impedes rather than advances reform. The agitation is pursuing a chimera which can never become a reality—the separation of Ireland from Great Britain. The panacea which will re-establish peace and prosperity among the Irish is not yet found, but it may safely be stated that the sovereign remedy does not lie in the autonomy so ardently demanded by Mr. Parnell and his friends. Ireland in the enjoyment of a separate existence would have to bear heavier burdens than those accruing from her participation in the English Budget, which she has already so much difficulty in supporting."
