BULLETINS FROM BIRDLAND

WINIFRED E. WILSON

BIRD SANCTUARIES

At the turn of the century matters in Birdland looked really serious. Some species had entirely disappeared, others were fast dwindling. Fortunately there were some bird conscious people including members of the Audubon Society, which came into being in 1904 for the express purpose of protecting wild birds.

Through their persistence, the federal governments of both Canada and the United States instituted laws to stop the indiscriminate shooting of game and migratory birds alike. In consequence, during the last fifty years more than 100 species of North American birds have increased.

True, public interest must yet be aroused. There are too many law breakers, who kill purely for the pleasure of killing, even when the birds are nesting and the young families are left to starve. Nevertheless, our birds are receiving more and more attention. The Audubon Society has expanded enormously, adding also thousands of junior members. Sanctuaries have sprung up in all parts of Canada, backed by the government, by conservation and bird societies, and by private individuals. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police do their best to assist the custodians in enforcing the law. Even some hunters seem anxious to avoid shooting too many waterfowl, and are urging others to help conservation by preserving breeding grounds. Ducks Unlimited is a very large conservation society with its membership made up chiefly of duck hunters drawn from all parts of both countries.

One of the most important and best known sanctuaries in the world was founded at Kingsville, Ontario, in 1904, by Jack Miner. Though started primarily for the protection of Canada Geese, which were fast becoming extinct, all species of birds know that there they are safe. At migration time it is not unusual for 30,000 Canada Geese to arrive in a day, stay the night, and leave the next morning. Through banding, it has been discovered that a great many return year after year, each time bringing friends with them. Some have been coming for 20 years. There is an infirmary where the wounded are cared for, and though most are finally able to join other flocks, cripples make the Jack Miner Sanctuary their permanent home.

The founder died in 1944, but the work of the bird refuge is carried on by his sons. At first it was run solely on private funds; later federal and provincial grants also became necessary. It is fitting that National Wildlife Week, an annual affair, should have been arranged to include April 10, the birthday of Jack Miner.

Do birds travel far?

Roll call was answered by a verse of scripture by sixteen members. Minutes were read and adopted. One new member joined.

"Blest be the Tie" followed by the Mispah Benediction brought the meeting to a close.

Lunch was served and a social hour followed. Mrs. John Beer invited members to her home for next meeting.
