DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Woman Seeks Comfort

Wife Of Faithless Husband Needs Prayer, Faith And Good Friends

DEAR MISS DIX: It would be a wonderful thing if you could give some sound consoling advice to the many, many women, including myself, who have gone through the agonizing heartbreak of finding their husbands to be unfaithful.

I have been married fourteen years and have a child of 12. My husband, though 50, is very attractive and I have always been considered an attractive person myself.

There is little consolation anyone can give to women in your position. What good are words in mending a broken heart, saving wounded pride, putting together the shattered pieces of a broken ideal?

How a husband can so sorely hurt the woman he loves—and most of them, in spite of infidelities, do continue to love their wives—is a mystery for which no one has a solution.

DEAR MISS DIX: There is a certain boy I like very much. He's the only boy I've ever gone with that I really liked. One Saturday night recently he stood me up and I got so mad I told him not to come back.

ANSWER: First of all, Daisy, did he have any reason for breaking the date, or offer any excuse? While it is a very rude thing to do, and your anger was certainly justifiable, circumstances do alter cases.

DEAR MISS DIX: I have just read your column concerning the servant and whom he should see first when he comes home—Continued on page 3

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D. MORE ABOUT ANTABUSE AND ALCOHOLISM I have written often about alcoholism and the various methods of treating it because all over the world today there is a determined effort to restore or rehabilitate alcoholics so that they will become normal, integral members of the community, helpful to their families and to their fellows.

While physicians and social workers believe the method used by Alcoholics Anonymous is nearest to ideal, because the members thereof acknowledge to themselves and to others that alcohol has beaten them and they need help, other methods of treatment have helped some alcoholics.

I have mentioned amphetamine sulfate (Benzedrine Sulfate) and dextrodine sulfate which help to remove the desire or appetite for alcohol and give the alcoholic a physical and mental boost or lift. Thus these drugs have a double action—removing desire and giving the needed lift.

I have also written about Antabuse which, for some time after using, causes such severe nausea if alcohol is taken that the alcoholic is afraid to drink alcohol.

In Medical Annals, District of Columbia, Washington, Drs. L. E. Wexberg, A. M. Zappala, and A. Steiner discuss the use of Antabuse as an adjunct in the rehabilitation of alcoholics and stress that the patient must have at least average intelligence and must realize the risk he incurs should he return to drinking alcohol while taking Antabuse.

The patient must not drink for four or five days before Antabuse is given. The first dose is 2 gm. This is decreased by half a gram each day to the maintenance dose of 1 gm. The drug is given daily before breakfast.

On the eighth day of treatment, patient is given 15 cc. of 90-proof whiskey every fifteen minutes. After about three doses a reaction occurs. Should the Antabuse-alcohol reaction be too severe, 1000 cc. of 5 per cent glucose in isotonic sodium chloride solution with 10000 mg. of ascorbic acid is injected into the veins.

The first and second tests with Antabuse should be made in a hospital.
