The Wall Flower BY MARION RUBINGAM

A BARGAIN Chapter 33

Dora was to see Mrs. Gates again before that lady left the day after Aunt Maude and Gladys arrived. Dora was sent in town to ask Mrs. Gates to come and see the furniture. "You go, Gladys and hunt her up. I'm not going to miss a chance to make some extra money," Aunt Maude declared. "Then you can visit with Mortie awhile."

"Send Dora too. I don't want to see any fussy furniture buyer. I've someone more interesting to talk to in town," Mrs. Gates answered. So on this suggestion Dora went, delighted at an excuse to hunt up her new friend. She passed Francis in the yard, with a very red headed woman wearing a long gray linen cape and a close fitting hat. The woman was floating down over her cap. Dora had never seen such a costume, it did not know it as the correct English nurse's outfit, and thought the young woman a sort of nun. She found Gloria in a fine race in the living room of the old fashioned house. "Here I'm a bad woman here because I wear low cut dresses in the evening and tea gowns in the afternoon," Gloria announced to explain her wrath. Her nervous face was flushed up to her crown again. "But my dear—it was very low, but they're not used to that sort of thing here," interposed Mrs. Hunsley mildly. "Do them good to see Gloria. I saw 'em then" snipped Gloria. "They say also that I'm bad because I'm not living with my husband—a man may be too evil or disagreeable for a self respecting woman to put up with, but in this precarious town, if she leaves him she is condemned. They also say I can't be good because I make my own living and support my son, and have what they call the extravagant luxury of a nurse for him. As though I could be child's nurse and run a business!"

"I fear, it's not because they heard you paid $300 for one dress," Mrs. Hunsley interposed again. "Goodness!" Dora said without thinking "Aunt Maude only paid $200 for Gladys' trousseau and that included the fur." "This made both women laugh. "Impossible!" cried Gloria. "It was your uncle started these stories about me. I was going to offer him $600 for his furniture, now I'll make it $300—and serve him right. Which she did the next day, driving out with Morton in Morton's carriage. Uncle Peter refused to had plenty of money and when it came to parting with the old pieces he had been brought up with he found himself suddenly re-orientated. Also, and this was the most important reason, he knew this "old stuff" was worth money. How much he didn't know—but he wanted a thousand to build a new barn. An amusing incident occurred while Mrs. Gates was at the farm. As she started toward the little old house with Aunt Maude, Uncle Peter and Dora Morton started too. Gladys, from the kitchen called sharply. "Morton! Come here!" And Morton started back. Gloria turned amazed eyes upon Dora. "Good Lord, he went!" she murmured. "And this is a man's world!" Her fine eyes rested intently upon her comrade a moment. Dora felt as though every secret in her life were being dragged forth under that searching gaze. "What was the matter child? I don't you like him?" she asked softly. Then she was answered by the whiteness of the girl's cheeks and the tightly drawn expression around her mouth. It was a curious expression. "When I'm in pain," Dora once wrote in her diary, "I feel as though my lips were drawn back about my teeth—like the shrunken dead skin on a corpse. I must look frightful then."

But the bargain was struck by Gladys when the party returned to the big farmhouse again. "Take the money," Gladys urged. "It's just what my clothes came to—then father can't rave because of what my trousseau cost." Mrs. Gates casually pulled three $100 bills from her purse, and asked for a receipt. She would have the stuff shipped to her offices next day she said. At parting she turned to Aunt Maude. "I've become such friends with your niece—I want her to come to a small party tomorrow, the night before I leave." "Dora can't go that far alone, thank you," Aunt Maude answered briefly. Dora went to the carriage. Morton made an unwise suggestion. "I'll come for her," he offered. "There was a silence laden heavily with everything Aunt Maude wanted to say, but didn't dare. She looked from Morton to Gladys and back to Mrs. Gates. Mrs. Gates refused to admit the just—met Gladys to the party. Aunt Maude's glance showed that Morton, engaged to Gladys, should take no other girls to parties. Dora refused. When Mrs. Gates urged her as they stood alone in the carriage she begged, "Please, please don't! I wouldn't dare—really." "Poor lamb!" Gloria murmured and drove away.

What New York Critics Said Of Great Fox Picture "Over The Hill"

"Over the Hill," the William Fox screen adaptation of the famous Will Carleton poem, not only had an amazing reception by a brilliant assemblage on the night of its premiere on Broadway, but, from the standpoint of press criticism, was accorded a most unusual welcome. The reviewers of the New York York press apparently vied with each other in singing the praises of this wonderful picture, of simple, some life and homely virtues. Frank Pope, writing in the New York Journal of Commerce, prefaced his review with the frank statement that he does not care for melodrama or melodrama. Then he adds, regarding the premiere of "Over the Hill," "But last night we saw Mary Carr, of whom we never heard of before, play a mother as a mother properly and as a mother should be. The scene at least—across the settee and a chair—was reviewed by Vera Gordon in Homersque and reviewers of plays did the same over Emma Dunn in 'Mother and Child' but let us them see Mary Carr in this picture. It is safe to assert that the camera never has recorded a finer, more faithful piece of acting."

"I wish suggested the acid test which has been played—'Over the Hill' in his criticism in the Evening Telegram. "An audience which included many distinguished persons gave the hearty welcome which is so richly deserved, and accorded not only a tribute of spontaneous laughter to the many delightful comedy scenes but also paid that rarer tribute, the gift of sympathetic tears over the pathetic incidents in the story." James Spearling, writing in the New York Times, declared: "Its capacity for tear-water and gallery cheers is unlimited. It is impressive—its assault upon the emotions is sweeping." Miss Agnes Smith, of the Morning Telegraph wrote: "It is so true and so vividly yet simply told, that it impresses it self upon your memory as one of the high spots in film production."

"It is a picture too fine, too old house with Aunt Maude, Uncle Peter and Dora Morton started too. Gladys, from the kitchen called sharply. "Morton! Come here!" And Morton started back. The Toll of Death in Russia

TEN MILLION CHILDREN in Russia are doomed to die in the slow agonies of starvation unless the people of Canada awaken in their generosity, and by gifts of food and money, enable the Save the Children Fund to prevent this horror. The famine in the Volga region is the most appalling in recorded history. Whole populations are exterminated. Children—fatherless and motherless, homeless, with death stalking their steps—wander the highways and byways until they creep into some abandoned hovel to die. Hundreds of thousands have died from starvation and neglect; but millions can be saved if food is dispatched at once. Will you give something? Will you save a helpless child from starving to death? What you do give means little to you—yet it means the life of a child! 25c will feed a child for a week. $1.00 will ensure sufficient food for one child for a month. $500 will establish a kitchen and feed 100 children until the next harvest.
