

FOR HAPPY HOLIDAYS

By Tracy Adrian

This charming skirt was designed with the Christmas holidays in mind and will be a perfect choice for many an important date. It is made of one of the new wonder fabrics which has been improved to better softness and drapability. Other advantages are that the material is crease resistant and can be hand laundered or dry cleaned. The skirt has radiating stripes of black against a brushed brown background that fall from a waistband of black velvet. With it is worn a plunge-back blouse of brushed nylon.

Banish Resistance To Diet

By IDA JEAN KAIN

Three diet savers can help to banish resistance to reducing. Stick-to-the-routine foods help control hunger in low calorie menus. A snack in the late afternoon affords an energy boost. . . . and losing excess fat at the satisfying rate of two pounds a week bolsters the morale.

Experiments show that high protein foods are most effective in satiety value. Hunger is best controlled when a protein food is included at each of the three meals. Make sure to have protein at breakfast; an egg or two, or an egg and a slice of lean meat, or hot cereal with milk. One donor expressed it this way: "To reduce, breakfast like a king, lunch like a prince, and eat like a pauper at dinner. In short, have the bulk of calories during the active part of the day and eat lightly at night."

Lunch can include cheese or cottage cheese, lean meat or fish, a sandwich in the midday of the noon meal, have the protein filling thick and the bread thinly sliced. The actual bulk of the food is important to the sense of fullness. A salad, or such fillers as celery, cabbage, a tomato, or any low calorie vegetable is helpful.

Pretty Packages Make Gifts More Glamorous

By ELEANOR ROSS

This is the season when ingenuity and imagination can be given full reign. Christmas decorations are a challenge. It's fun to see and how easy it is to do up how much can be done with little simple presents and make them things of true beauty.

We received many wonderful gifts last year, but nothing pleased us more than one particular package.

A friend had wrapped a pound of really good tea in green and silver metallic paper and, on top, placed a fine porcelain cup and saucer taken from her valuable collection. The cup was filled with cellophane strips on which rested a foil-wrapped lemon. The whole thing was done up with ribbons, pretty bows and a spring of artificial mistletoe. The gift was both practical and imaginative.

distance: so I don't know if he has serious emotional objections to your club membership that takes you out two nights a month, leaving him home baby-sitting.

But you say he is a good husband, and that he doesn't drink any more—and the "any more" suggests that he once did drink. Also, he is a faithful father, it seems, keeping his children to the fore in his daily interests. This adds up to the picture of a chap who is growing—who is becoming steadily more of a man than he was before marriage, say.

Thus I venture to hope that an optimistic view of his future conduct is justified. It is hard to believe that a man so well behaved in general would explode into reckless drinking and staying-out, just to spite a good wife for beginning to include herself in the womanly sociability of the neighborhood.

CLUB FOR SOMETHING?

I am assuming, of course, that your chief stands for something that it performs a good work; that it isn't simply a card-playing time-wasting get-together.

As to whether you should give up the club, I feel that its character and purpose should influence your decision. If it is a study group, or a productive alliance devoted to church work or other form of helpfulness to society, surely your husband (as a reasonable man) ought to favor your identification with the substantial part of the community. Such association is potentially valuable for the children too, affording them a larger background of family friends.

DON'T MAKE ISSUE

So if this is the picture, try gently to persuade your husband to endorse your attendance at meetings; and show your appreciation of his baby-sitting in thoughtful ways. For example, on meeting nights, make supper a special occasion, featuring foods or desserts that he likes best. Or provide something new in reading—a magazine, a paperback novel, or a book from the library that deals with his favorite subjects.

However, if the meetings are pure frivolity, for party chatter and escape from household humdrum, it might be wiser to quit the club and stick to your knitting on the home front. M.H.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Here Is A Good Old Wish

So all on a morning of December, there were furrows turned at Alderlea today. Not in any extensive plowing, nevertheless all that the farmers had hoped to complete.

"I wonder," James said looking back to where the tractor then homed down along the farm-lane. "Why's he leaving the plow in the field?"

"To plow in January," we chuckled.

And now Christmas, the best season, draws on smartly—and with it comes our own holiday-time.

"Of all the holidays in the year," one writes in a nice editorial in a farm-paper, "Christmas is the kindest!"

"It is a pause, warm-hearted and joyous, in the workaday round. It is a respite, enabling us to put aside, however briefly, our cares and concerns, and to share the happiness of the day with those we love."

"More than anything else, Christmas is a home time. Even those who for one reason or another are not in the midst of their family circle on Christmas Day, are thinking hard about it, and recalling tenderly the faces and voices of those they love."

"Yes, Christmas is the day when the home is glorified above all the other things in this busy busy world."

"And so indeed it should be, for most of the good things in our lives were first taught to us, and persistently cherished, in our homes. Love of truth, honour, fair play—courage, steadfastness, companionship and kindness—let us not forget that these were first made real to us at our fathers' and mothers' knees."

"Some of us looking about the world today, reading and hearing news of troubled events in many places, may well wonder what has happened to these homely virtues. If they are indeed such potent forces for good, how can man be so continually at strife with Man?"

"Perhaps the answer is that so many of us, here, there and every where tend to lose precisely that home touch as we grow up into the world. Perhaps too if we can revive it, if more and more of us can learn to use it as our rule of thumb, we shall attain to the original ideal of Christmas Day—the day which held out the hope of 'Peace on Earth—Good Will to Men'."

In many a home this Christmas, for the first time, there will be a vacant chair at the festive board, a smile, a loved face missing. In other homes how joyous it will be, with the family circle still intact. What matter there the par-

MARY HAWORTH

Husband Has Wife Worried

Dear Mary Haworth: I am nearing 30 years of age, and I have two wonderful children and a good husband. We have been married nearly eight years.

We have never gone anywhere or done anything socially unless we could take our children. I always have felt that we should get out at least twice a month, but couldn't until recently, when I joined a club.

Now I am away from home two evenings a month, for two or three hours each time. I prepare the children for bed before I leave, they sit and watch TV (with their father) until bedtime.

MAY GET FED-UP

I always encourage my husband to go out but he won't. He likes races and sports and could always go with the right crowd. He does not drink any more, and we have more to spend for a night out.

Now since I have joined the club he says he is counting the nights and will make me sorry I go out and leave him with the children. I tell him he is being childish; but deep down I am afraid he just might get fed up with it, enough to start drinking and staying out all night.

Should I give up my club? Or am I being foolish about the whole thing? L. K.

Dear L.K.: Naturally I can't read your husband's mind at this

A Chef's Crabmeat Dish For Holiday Entertaining

By IDA BAILEY ALLEN

"This crabmeat is what I call wonderful," observed the Chef, lifting a big lump of Japanese king crab from the can.

"It is succulent, fresh-tasting and firm," he continued. "Big pieces from the claws are carefully packed in the lacquered tin that has been lined with wax paper. The hard membranes from the crab have been almost entirely removed, which makes it perfect for use in making easy-to-fix dishes."

"Let's work out some recipes," Chef, I replied. "For example, a good well-chilled crabmeat cocktail put together with lemon juice Worcestershire, a little thin sour cream and some chopped chives. Instead of using tomato ketchup with it, let's add some diced fresh tomato and serve it in a hollowed tomato cup. This will bring out the delicate flavor."

"And I, Madame, will create a new crabmeat dish for holiday entertaining."

Here is the recipe.

Crabmeat - Asparagus Divan: Remove any hard membrane from 2 (6½ oz.) cans Japanese king crabmeat. Leave in chunks.

Cook 2 (10 oz.) pkgs. frozen asparagus in salt water. Arrange on an oven-proof platter.

Arrange the crabmeat on the asparagus.

Combine ¼ c. mayonnaise, 1 tsp. lemon juice, 1 tsp. table mustard, 2 drops Tabasco and 3 tsp. grated onion.

Spoon on top of the crabmeat. Dust with grated cheese. Bake 20 min., in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F.

Tomorrow's Dinner: Rippe olive French dressing on lettuce; individual meat loaves; tomato sauce butter-fried potatoes; cauliflower with cheese; prune cream whip; coffee, tea or milk.

ROUTINE

5:30 Mix and bake meat loaves.

5:35 Start cauliflower.

5:40 Make prune whip.

5:45 Set table; heat canned tomato sauce.

5:50 Fry potatoes.

5:55 Make salad; 1 egg, ½ tsp. 5:59 Start coffee.

6:00 Serve dinner.

All measurements are level recipes proportioned to serve 4 to 6.

Individual Meat Loaves: Combine ½ lb. each ground raw beef, raw veal and raw pork.

Add ½ c. fine enriched bread crumbs, ¼ c. milk, 1 egg, ½ tsp. poultry seasoning, 1 tsp. salt, ½ tsp. pepper and 1 tsp. onion juice. Mix thoroughly.

Pack into oiled good-sized muffin pans. Bake 25 min., in a moderate oven, 375 degrees F.

Prune Cream Whip from the Chef:

Beat 1 c. heavy cream until stiff with 3 tsp. sugar.

Fold in 1 c. quartered, stoned prunes and 1-3 tsp. vanilla. Serve in sherbet glasses lined with strips of sponge cake.

Will Of Poetess Pauline Johnson Was Not Observed

VANCOUVER (CP)—The will of Pauline Johnson, Indian princess who won world renown for her romantic poetry, has been uncovered and made public here, more than 40 years after her death.

The will shows that friends and admirers in Vancouver did not comply with her last wish and erected a monument to commemorate her.

Born at Chiefswood on the Grand River reserve near Brantford, Ont., she died here March 7, 1913 at the age of 51.

Her voluminous will, written nine days before her death, was recently discovered in the vault of a legal firm during a check of yellowed files. It was probated shortly after her death and the meagre estate distributed among relatives and admirers.

WISHES NOT FOLLOWED

"I desire . . . that no tombstone or monument be raised in my memory," she said in the will. "I prefer to be remembered in the hearts of my people and my public."

But her wishes were not followed. The Pauline Johnson memorial, a stone cairn, now stands in Vancouver's Stanley Park, a natural forest of 1,000 acres where she often walked.

Pauline Johnson had known much public adulation and much private suffering and poverty.

Much of her estate consisted of Indian relics, presents from admirers, the poor and the famous.

The monument was rector by the Vancouver branch of the Women's Canadian Club, after admirers of Miss Johnson had sought to perpetuate her memory.
