Blacksmith, As Hobbiest, Works Exclusivily In Ivory

WINNIPEG (CP)—"Ivory Joe" Yarmalow, a Churchill blacksmith who is well-known for his carvings in ivory, was faced with a problem when he planned a visit to Winnipeg recently.

In his tiny combination home and workshop at Churchill were three pieces of sculpture representing eight years' work. Joe, a 60-year-old bachelor, was apprehensive about leaving them, so he packed them in a specially-built case and brought them with him.

One of the pieces, an ornate cribbage board, is in itself a miniature museum of northern wild life. The ivory carving has a polar bear, walrus, seal, ptarmigan, arctic eagle, wolf, husky, arctic owl and American eagle—all fitted into the over-all design of the board by brass and wooden pegs.

ABSORBING HOBBY

Joe says this piece alone kept him busy from 1949 to 1954. It represents about 3,000 hours' work.

Mr. Yarmalow works exclusively with the ivory of the walrus tusk, given to him at Churchill as presents from Eskimos in remote Arctic areas. They send it on ships which play between the port and their hunting grounds.

Ivory is the ideal material to work in to achieve a fine degree of reproduction in form, he says. The carving of the polar bear is a five-inch high figure, complete to the last black molar.

A Lithuanian immigrant with only a smattering of book learning, Joe began working with ivory 20 years ago to pass the long northern nights after his day's work with the National Harbor Board at Churchill.

A year spent in a sculpture school in his native Lithuania gave him the basic grounding for his skill.

NOT FOR SALE

He carves a few smaller pieces for presents and souvenirs, but his larger pieces, are not for sale although he has received an offer of $2,200 for the cribbage board.

He works mainly with files of his own design and a small lathe. The pieces are finished to a gleaming white sheen with cleanser.

Joe says his eyes are feeling the strain of intricate work. He now is preparing plans for what he says will be his last major carving.

It will be an eskimo seated in a kayak, surrounded by the various animals he hunts.

Two Former Blackshirt SS Officers Get 18-Month Term

MUNICH, Germany (Reuters)—Two former blackshirt SS officers Tuesday were sentenced to 18 months in prison for aiding in the liquidation of SA brownshirt leaders 23 years ago.

Former SS general Sepp Detirich, 64, was convicted of aiding in the shooting of six brownshirt officers June 30, 1934, when Hitler consolidated his power.

Michael Lippert, 59, forme rSS colonel and guard commandant at Dachau concentration camp, was sentenced for the premediated killing of Ernst Roehm, SA chief of staff.

More than 100 of Roehm's storm trooper supporters were slain on Hitler's orders.

"If there had not been such absolutely immoral, devoted and fanatical helpers (QSUCH AS Dietrich and Lippert) then the creation of dictatorial violence with its destructive effect would have lacked an important foundation," said presiding Judge Ludwig Graf.

The two former Nazis, both of whom have served war crime sentences, sat unmoved during the reading of the judgment. When the court adjourned, both were patted on the back by friends among the 200 spectators. Dietrcih and Lppiert were released pending ain appeal.

During the week-long trial, the ex-blackshirts contended they had obeyed legal orders, that they played a minor role in the killings, and that the crimes took place too long ago to be tried now.

The defence also contended that the liquidation of Hitler's rivals was needed to prevent civil war and to preserve the German state.

Judge Graf said the defendants could not be acting under mitairy orders because the SS was not a military organization.

The SS (Schutzstaffel) were the elite guard of the Nazi movement while the SA (Sturmabeilung) were the storm troopers and strongarm men of Hitler's party.

Dietrch, one of Hitler's Panzer division commanders, was released in October, 1955, from the American-controlled prison at Landsberg for his share in the Malmedy massacre, where U.S. soldiers were slain. Lippert was released last year from a Dutch prison.
