Home

Love, Teamwork, Peace Make A Happy One

What does it take to make a real home? You can't make one just with stones and bricks, for there are palaces filled with period furniture and priceless ornaments that are no more homes than is a shop or a jail or a museum.

You can't make a home just by good house-keeping, for there are houses in which every meal is a feast, where every floor is swept and scrubbed and garnished, where every chair is in its appointed place and yet from which husbands and children flee as if from a purgatory.

So what does it take to make a home, this thing that we all crave more than anything else in life and which we all try to fashion out of our bungling hands, and which sometimes turns out a success and sometimes a failure?
