THE MINISTRY OF HEALING

The talk of the socialization of medical services seems to have stirred the medical world. Did not Robert Louis Stevenson say that the medical profession was the greatest of all the professions? Historically medicine and religion have been connected, for in early times many diseases were attributed to evil spirits, and the church was looked upon as the agency to combat these.

Society owes much to its medical men. The old adage, "tres medici duo atheni," — three medical men, two athletes, is not taken seriously now, for many of our doctors and surgeons are proudly religious men. Fildes, the artist, pictured the doctor sitting beside the bed of a child watching the tide of life ebbing and flowing. This picture a doctor's office. Then Ian MacLaren has given us the sketch of the man whom they are seeking to kill? And behold He speaks boldly! "In the end they did kill Him because He insisted on teaching truths which threatened the vested interests of one class and which condemned the political aims and methods of another. But Jesus' martyrdom only released the truth for which He stood and soon it captured the mightiest empire in history and spread out to all the world. The story of the Cross gave it wings for flight.

Medicine and surgery have made wonderful strides in the last generation or two. I recall reading the life of the late Hon. Dr. Parker, who was a great surgeon and philanthropist, how before the use of anaesthetics a patient on whom he was to operate, got away and ran down town. He was caught and brought back, kept down by force and his jaw was operated on. The Doctor was told when a student in Edinburgh that the man who opened the human abdomen should be put in a lunatic asylum. Besides, diseases which in the old days took a great toll of human life—smallpox and diphtheria — are not dreaded now as once they were. Montaigne tells of the absurd prescriptions that were prescribed in his day. This is one: "left foot of a tortoise, the excrement of an elephant, liver of a mole, the blood from under the left wing of a white pidgeon, rats pounded to small powder." This was to be mixed and taken.

It has been said that lawyers see people at their worst, ministers see people at their best and doctors carry many secrets to their graves.

Psychiatry is a recognized branch of medical study now. Even Shakespeare long ago knew how the mind affected health. In MacBeth we have a doctor when called to minister to a patient say: "when asked if he could minister to a mind diseased, therein the patient mind the lady MacBeth: "More needs she the divine than the physician."

Man is a being made up of body and soul. The medical man ministers to the body, and his brother the clergyman ministers to the soul, so that it takes both to minister to the total man. I read some time ago about surgeons discussing their work and it was admitted that a better bit of work could be accomplished when the morals, or courage, of the patient was high great deal depends thus on the mind of the one to be treated. This is where religion enters the picture. Is it not true that often before an operation the patient expresses a desire to have the ministrations of the church?

Have we not known doctors who before an operation asked in presence of the patient divine assistance in the task in hand, linked as it was with uncertainty? Is it not true that a man with a belief in worth ten men with only interests? Is this not equally true: medical science is ultimately a branch of spiritual science, and that bodily healing requires a knowledge of psychic as well as of physical conditions, and also that the medical ministry to a diseased and bro-

AN AGE-OLD ERROR

As we write there comes a report of the annual meeting of the youth group of one of our political parties. One of their resolutions is a protest against the government against having any "truck or trade" with Franco's Spain. The reason is that under this Fascist government freedom of thought and discussion is denied; truth and human rights are these young people see them are suppressed by force. It happens that Spain is not the only country against which such charges are being laid.

An age-old error is re-appearing in modern forms—the error that truth can be slain by killing its advocates. Just after that report came over the air we happened to turn to the seventh chapter of St. John's Gospel. There we read about Jesus teaching in the temple. As He taught there came this remark from the crowd: "Is not this the man whom they are seeking to kill? And behold He speaks boldly!" In the end they did kill Him because He insisted on teaching truths which threatened the vested interests of one class and which condemned the political aims and methods of another. But Jesus' martyrdom only released the truth for which He stood and soon it captured the mightiest empire in history and spread out to all the world. The story of the Cross gave it wings for flight.

For example, the Bible is a closed book to the vast majority of Canadian young people. The churches are developing their programs of religious education, but still religious illiteracy is wide-spread. Now the bible is prized where Christianity is just beginning to make its way. For example, reports of the work of Bible Societies reveal amazing interest and enterprise in the distribution in mission lands. The colporteur follows close on the heels of the missionary and is showing the same sublime indifference to hardship and persecution in bringing the Word of Life to people who are hearing for the first time of God's redeeming grace. They are meeting an eager response, and the report of our own Bible Society thrills us with examples of recent converts matching the heroism of those who bring their own and darling in propagating the truth.

While this is going on in lands just newly evangelized, Christian families in this privileged nation are forgetting the Book out of which their fathers drew their strength and inspiration. The churches have privileges open to them for teaching the bible in the public schools; they must enter these open doors; they must teach the Bible more thoroughly in their Sunday Schools. As in Isaiah's day such teaching must be "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little." But let us have a widespread return to the Source of all our privileges. God's revealed truth and will, so that we shall know what we believe and be able to give a reason for the hope that is in us.

These lines were written long before the American Civil War, and were directed against the tactics of men who denied that the famous Declaration that all men were free and equal applied to the Negro. Yet Lincoln's victories did not kill the serpent; driven from one position it wriggled its way into others and is more vigorous in our time. For example, at the recent Red Cross meeting in Toronto, representatives of totalitarian governments made charges against free nations which they could not prove and which they dare not permit to be investigated.

Canada is a free country. The fact that no such freedom would be allowed in their country did not deter them from using this freedom. Can ever be adequately carried on unless as a mediation of the eternal goodness and love.

Make up the groaning record of the past. And again: "By the light of burning heretics Christ's bleeding feet I track Tolling up new Galvaries over with the Cross that turns not back."
