WOMEN'S INTRAMURALS

WOMEN'S INTRAMURALS
by Shelly Pepler

I guess the saying that "no news is good news" certainly applies to this week's column. All was pretty quiet on the western front last week. I hope I didn't scare anyone away with last week's column! Seriously though, more participation is needed. Intramurals are like so many other things at university (sex, drinking, smoking, skipping classes, etc) - once you've tried it - you'll like it.

Basketball seems to be the hottest item to date. It looked as though we might be able to start before Christmas, but it seems that with exams, trouble scheduling the gym, etc., all we are going to be able to do is have a tournament in early December. At least four teams are needed, and judging from last week's response, we should be able to get at least that many teams. Next week I will be listing the names of the captains for the different teams. If you're interested, sign up with one of them. Teams will not necessarily be strictly residence or floor teams, but rather up to the discretion of the various captains. No experience is necessary and if the tournament is successful (by that I mean participation whip) then a weekly league will be set up for the second semester. Watch this column for more news. And by the way, if you have any suggestions, comments or criticisms as to how the women's intramural program is being run this year, by all means tell me. Feedback is so necessary. In fact, if it wasn't for Judy MacDonald of First Floor Bernadine (a rookie at that) suggesting that we try basketball, there might never have been anything said or done about it. So, we are all ears for your suggestions, comments, and yes, even criticism. Because you're right, Neil, no one is perfect, least of all me.

PREDICTIONS OF THE WEEK: The Alouettes to win the big one at the "Big O"
: Bruce and Jayne Hickey to become the "all-time trouble-makers" at UPEI.
