

Says Reds In Asia Fear 3rd World War

WASHINGTON (AP) — Malcolm MacDonald, British high commissioner for Southeast Asia, said today Communists in that area fear a third world war and believe they can get what they want without military action.

For these reasons, MacDonald said, "I think it's unlikely that the Communists will try military aggression, during the next stage at any rate, in Southeast Asia."

In a copyrighted interview with the magazine U. S. News and World Report, MacDonald said he believes the Communists now will try "peaceful economic and political penetration and conspiracy" in Burma and Thailand.

He said a current decline in world market prices for rice, a principal export of Thailand, may cause trouble there.

REDS PLANT DOUBTS

MacDonald said American policy is often suspect among Asians because many believe Communist claims that "Americans want a third world war — a preventive war — to stop the Communists from getting further."

He characterized India's influence in Southeast Asia as declining but still "very great."

"Increasing numbers of influential men," he added, "... are beginning to question the feasibility and wisdom of absolute neutrality in the cold war."
