

"I think it's just part of my nature that I get bored easily... I like variety."

— literature of the sixteenth century is connected to the drama. And it's connected to the history and to the philosophy and so on. One of the things the linking community does is to insist that there is an essential connectedness."

Along with the bestowing of the title of 3M Fellow, Dr. Murray gets to attend a three-day retreat at the Chateau Montebello in Quebec with this year's other nine fellows. She also receives a lifetime membership to the STLHE. But even with all this well-deserved recognition, Dr. Murray is not about to rest on her laurels; she says she sees the fellowship as a responsibility to continue to work to improve her teaching.

"I have never finished a course and said, 'There, you taught that just right.' I have never been perfectly happy with my performance as a teacher."

steps of the research paper [studied] in 101, we actually did in 195."

The success of the program led to its expansion this year to include five courses over two semesters.

"I think it's in some ways unfortunate that we have such strictly defined disciples and such strictly defined courses. So I teach a course in sixteenth-century non-dramatic poetry
