

NURSING... OUR CUP OF TEA

Believed to be the largest evening class ever enrolled at the Prince Edward Island Hospital School of Nursing, 30 new girls yesterday started out on their nursing careers.

A reception was held for the girls and their parents in the nurses' residence to give them all a chance to become acquainted with instructors and fellow students. Three of the new students are shown receiving a welcoming smile from Miss E. MacLeod, RN, director of nurses, as they wait for her to pour tea.

From the left are Marilyn Buchanan, Fredericton; and Mary and Laura Jenkins (sisters) from Annandale.

John and Robert Mayne, sons of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Mayne (nee Simpson) Ottawa, are guests of their grandfather, George H. Mayne, Emerald. They will spend two weeks on the Island visiting with their many relatives, after which they will return to Ottawa to attend Carleton University — John in fourth year and Robert in first.

Stewart, for the recent marriage of Beatrice Euphemia Cameron, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Cameron to William Albert Crawford, son of William S. Crawford and the late Mrs. Crawford.

Mrs. Louis Cameron, sister-in-law of the bride played the traditional wedding music and accompanied Harold Coffin as he sang "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden" during the signing of the register.

The church was enhanced with blue and white delphinium and yellow mums, and the guest pews were marked with white bows and blue featherballs.

Given in marriage by her brother, Ernest Cameron, the bride wore a street length dress of white crystal crepe, featuring the empire waistline accented with white lace applique, v-neckline, pleated bodice and bracelet length lily point sleeves. Silver bowls of pink roses and sweet peas were at each end of the table. Rev. Townsley, acting as master of ceremonies called upon Hugh Lowry who proposed the toast to the bride. This was responded to by the groom, who in turn proposed a toast to the matron-of-honour, responded to by the groomsmen. The groom then proposed a special toast to the bride's aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Everett Anderson who were celebrating their 63rd wedding anniversary. Serving were the women of the church and friends of the bride. Gladys MacMillan circulated the guest book.

Following the reception, friends and neighbours gathered at the bride's home in Head of Hillsboro, to extend their felicitations to the bridal couple. ELLEN'S DIARY

It Was A Day To Reflect On Warm Days Gone By

"Come down out of that wind, Dear. It's sheltered here" we could fairly hear the one pigeon say to her mate this morning, as she moved the roof of the barn, from its topmost perch, to be in the warm sunshine and shelter below.

"It is warmer here" he acknowledged presently, bowing his thanks.

"I think" Alex offered, noting them, "we can say for sure, we keep pigeons now. They've been about the place so long" he smiled.

Bright and sunlit the day was, but the wind which blew down from the fields, was decidedly cool. It was a day to don sweaters and jackets and gloves for the outdoors, to reflect in the unseasonal coolness, rather wistfully, on the warm summer days gone by. And to conjecture as to whether or not, September would bring us, as in years past, a goodly share of the blue and gold harvest days.

"We just may get a cool September after the warm summer" James commented at breakfast. Doors were closed. There was no nice glimpse of the flowerings on the lawn, though we knew that the morning frost which had glistened on the edge of the tiers of the red shingles on the roof of the woodshed, had not reached down to harm the flowers.

"There'll come warm summery days yet" we said. "There must be, to give perfect settings for all the September brides!"

"Time will tell, Ellen" James smiled, rising to come to his work, to have all the chores done in good time, before the wood-sawing should call its crew together again. Of late, the mornings as well as the afternoons have foregathered them to the work. At the beginning, as has been his custom the years, James had brought in an armful of the first-sawed sticks in a good luck gesture, to the woodbox in the porch.

"Happy burning!" he had smiled.

What cheerful fires we should have in the months ahead. The tea-kettle would sing its winter-song, when frosty fields reached cold and white up the valley. And when an east wind swept snow against the panes, and the lights were blurred in the house across the lane, how cozy about our hearths we would be!

Fish was our supper-dish a mackerel, its pattern similar to an area of today's sky: blue and silvery — and cold from the ice of the "tank" on the fishman's red truck.

Police believe that Mrs. Shripat was drugged, robbed of her gold and diamond ornaments and placed in a long distance train.

Two businessmen traveling home by a suburban train reported that a "well-dressed woman" sitting next to them opened her hand bag. The next thing they remembered is they felt sleepy. When they awakened, their wallets were gone.

Many suburban burglaries have been attributed to women criminals. Some of the burglaries have been entirely female affairs. In others, women have collaborated with men.
