Opening lead—ten of hearts.

There are many stock situations covered in the textbooks where declarer is advised to deal with particular combinations of cards in a certain specified manner.

One learns to deal with these recurring situations almost mechanically, whether the type of play involved is a certain type of finesse or a certain type of safety play.

The trouble with playing bridge mechanically is that all too often what appears to be a stock situation turns out upon occasion not to be, and the slight variation from the standard example completely changes the treatment that is accorded it.

What this points up is that it is dangerous to follow general rules blindly. Each hand should stand on its own merits and not rest on a generality.

In the deal shown it is very easy for declarer to go wrong in the play if he relies only on past experience. It seems natural to win the heart lead in dummy and lead a low diamond and finesse the ten. When a heart is returned and a diamond is led to the ace, declarer suddenly discovers he can no longer make the contract. He goes down one.

But the fact is that South can assure himself of nine tricks regardless of how the adverse cards are distributed. How the diamonds are divided, whether 3-2, 4-1, or 5-0, or where the K-Q are located are all matters of only secondary concern.

Declarer starts with eight top tricks. He is looking for the ninth. Obviously, the only source is in diamonds. All he has to do to guarantee the production of the ninth trick is to lead a diamond to the ace, forgoing the luxury of a finesse.

In this hand he happens to catch the king and his worries are over. But in any hand that can exist it is bound to be successful. Regardless of what West plays, declarer leads a low diamond to the jack. If either opponent has the K-Q-x-x or K-Q-x-x-x, the situation shows up and another diamond trick becomes automatic. If the diamond honors are divided, or the suit breaks 3-2, the task becomes even simpler.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
