"CHANGES IN SCHOOL.—The pupils and teachers arriving at Montague High School next week will notice a few changes this year, the school having undergone some renovation during the summer. A new classroom has been constructed in the basement, placed between grade XI and grade IX rooms. The corridor between these rooms and the furnace room has been completely finished so as to present a fine appearance. On the first floor a water fountain has been installed at the west end of the corridor for the convenience of the pupils, and also that the basement may be kept as quiet as possible. Some work has also been done on the lawn in front of the school, and it is possible that more will be completed at a later date. The west section of the roof, which has required attention for some time, was re-shingled this summer so as to prevent any leakage. The trustees are to be commended on the very fine improvements made this year.

presentation. The screen play by Phillip Dunne and Ring Lardner, Jr., written from Jerome Cady's adaptation enhanced all of the dramatic power and spectacle of the story. "Forever Amber" provides a memorable picture of great contrast. Scenes of London's cluttered streets in the Seventeenth Century, and dark, dank, Newgate Prison make the splendor of the lavish parties and balls given at Whitehall Palace and the brilliance of the Theatre Royal, seem all the more magnificent. The squall of thieves in their rags and tatters give added emphasis to the gleaming satins and gold brocades worn by the Lord and Ladies of King Charles' Court. And it is against this rich and ever-changing tapestry that Amber moves in her fight for the love and happiness that was to elude her.

The staging of the story's dramatic sequences stand among Hollywood's finest achievements. The great London fire of 1666, which swept 273 acres, destroying 13,200 homes and a score of buildings was recreated on the company's back lot with two fire departments and a police force of 200 standing by to control the holocaust. For ten days, Cornel Wilde as Bruce Carlton and Glenn Langan as Rex Morgan fought one of the longest fercest duels in movie history. The Black Plague of 1666, perhaps the worst catastrophe ever to strike any great city took weeks to film. On the brighter side are the balls staged in Whitehall Palace, the scenes in the Theatre Royal and the episodes in the little village of Marygreen. The most painstaking work of all, however, went into Amber's romantic movements, since it was love that motivated every movement, and love that must motivate the picture.
