

But even in the face of government hostility, the women's movement has managed to salvage some of their gains.

Two years ago, the government went on another budget-axing spree, shaving close to 15 percent from the Secretary of State Women's Program.

The government threatened to shut down more than 30 women's shelters. But it ditched these plans when women mounted a fierce opposition.

And thousands of community and social justice groups across the country are increasingly banding together in grassroots associations to demand responsible funding.

"A woman's writing is always feminine; it cannot help being feminine; at its best it is most feminine. The only difficulty lies in defining feminine." -Virginia Woolf

I'd like to thank the Student Union volunteers, secretary, campus police, Wendy at central printing, and my committee of volunteers who counted the ballots.
