ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

"There's nothing better than a good bowl of porridge to start a way the day!" Mr. C. from the House on the Hill beyond Alderlea remarked this morning, he having come while we were still at breakfast.

He had left his bachelor's quarters, which know neither the sound of a woman's laughter nor her tears, to come in the road through the refreshing coolness of early morning before our work had had been long astir.

James nodded his agreement — and made a meaningful sign to us to replenish his empty teacup.

"There's some substance to it," Mr. C. continued, "that lasts a fellow through his morning's work."

And we smiled, recalling a conversation we once had with a bachelor in our school-teaching years, one who enjoyed the reputation of being an excellent cook — as indeed he was. We were curious at the time about his skill in the culinary arts.

"And what do you cook for yourself in the morning?" we questioned him. "Why, breakfast, of course!" he replied slowly, weighing the words.

"Yes, but what...?" "Isn't breakfast porridge?" he questioned with a twinkle.

"And for dinner?" "Oh, when I'm not busy in the fields, I cook meat and potatoes and usually some other vegetable. And for dessert... I'm going to tell you, Ellen," he dropped his voice, "there's nothing I like better than a dish of left-over porridge!"

Not long ago, a bachelor sent us an appreciated poem; and one nice souvenir for our scrapbook; and one we were sorry to miss, being at the time one of numbers attending Service in an old and much venerated Church at some distance away, left us a bouquet of roses in mixed colors, a beautiful offering and of "a bachelor's growing."

And, as we have said, one comes these days to lend assistance at the shingling; and another, a philosophical fellow, is good help at the hayrack.

We think of him now, with a chuckle, as behind a line of dusky hills, the day so lovely throughout, fades still beautiful to its rest. For his sayings inspire humour though behind them we often find an exceptional keenness of thought.

Household cares over for a time... Ah! we should have crossed our fingers! For it is not James at the moment calling gruffly: "Lunch-time, Ellen!"

Until tomorrow... Good-night...

The Stars Say --

By Genevieve Kemble

For Tomorrow

REFLECT carefully this day before taking any action which involves financial risk. This is not a day in which to engage in speculation of any kind or to indulge in extravagant whims.

With the Moon in Sagittarius, however, this is an excellent period in which to make decisions affecting your career, to engage in legal consultations or to make plans for a trip. Those in the musical field are under especially beneficent influences. Domestic matters should prosper.

For the Birthday

If tomorrow is your birthday, you may look ahead to a year in which achievement will depend largely on your personal efforts. Toward the end of the year you should receive some cooperation from close business and personal associates.

Not only is speculation foolhardy for you this year, but it would also be unwise to indulge in extravagance or to lend large sums of money. Domestic and social affairs should prosper, and there is a possibility that you will make a short trip in the fall.

A child born on this day will be dynamic, self-confident and magnanimous in dealing with others.

Household Scrapbook

Prevent Sticking

To prevent corks from sticking in the necks of bottles containing glue, rub a little glycerine over the surface of the corks.

Dents in Wood

If the surface is solid, not veneered, cover the dent with small pieces of blotting paper dipped in hot water and apply the tip of a heated poker or soldering iron to the topmost piece of paper. Repeat as many times as may be necessary to cause the compressed wood fibers to swell to their original dimensions.

Reviewed Color

A spoonful of vinegar to each quart of rinsing water will sometimes revive faded colors in wash goods, particularly when the fading has been caused by the use of washing soda and strong soaps in laundering. Wring thoroughly and dry as quickly as possible.

How Can I...!

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I clean a stone or brick fireplace?

A. Hot water and strong soap, applied with a stiff brush, are often adequate. If not, mix up a paste of powdered pumice and concentrated ammonia and cover the smoked areas with it. Let it stay about an hour or two before scrubbing off with hot water and soap.

Q. How can I rid a houseplant of aphids?

A. Save the soapy water in which you wash your stockings or undies at night. In the morning, when the water is cool, pour it over the plant and soil.

Q. How can I remove paint splatters from furniture?

A. Put a few drops of machine oil on the spots and then rub them lightly with steel wool.

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN-

He Enjoys His Chums

Employed Wife Eager To Win Husband From Constant Company Of Buddies

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm a bride of eight months, living at my mother's home with my husband. We all get along fine. My husband works during the day and goes to school at night, while I work, too, sometimes putting in a good deal of overtime. Thus, my husband and I see very little of each other. On Sunday, which is the only day we could be together, he insists on inviting friends over without consulting me.

This is a practice that has been going on since we first met. When he was courting, he'd frequently bring one of his buddies along. I don't like to seem unsocial, and I assure you I'm not, but I would like to make him realize that one day together isn't too much. These visits also strain our limited budget and make more work for my mother. I am 22 and my husband is 27.

HE LIKES HIS PALS

ANSWER: Your young husband's devotion to his pals was so marked before marriage, that I'm surprised he ever got to the altar. Apparently what's happened to you two is that you are so involved in work, school, and domesticity that you've never had a chance to become really acquainted with each other. The sort of intimate companionship that is the source of all marital joy isn't automatically achieved through the exchange of marriage vows. It comes as a result of working and playing together toward a definite end. With both of you working so hard to have a successful marriage, you probably laugh at the idea that you're aiming in the wrong direction — yet it's so. Your husband's social inclinations have always tended away from you, and you must make a mighty big effort to turn them in the right direction at this late date. Such an adjustment is usually part of courtship and the engagement period.

Try to persuade your husband to schedule his Sundays — one for you, one for the old gang. Then make your Sunday so enjoyable for him, that he'll learn to rely on you for entertainment rather than on his buddies. No nagging — just fun.

DEAR MISS DIX: My friends have many parties, during which their parents always manage to disappear. I don't dare have a party at my house because my folks are so conservative they insist on staying around to chaperon. Is there any way I can hint to them that they aren't wanted? They are really wonderful parents, and this is the only fault I could possibly find in them.

ANSWER: I must agree with your parents that one of them, at least, should remain at home during the course of a party. Young people should not have a house to themselves at a party. Perhaps your young friends may not like the idea of chaperonage, but I'm sure their parents do even though they, themselves, lack the courage to enforce their convictions.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. Is it necessary for a man to rise when dining alone, and another man stops at his table?

A. If there is no great difference in age, it is not necessary. If the man who stops is elderly, then it is courteous for the younger man to rise.

Q. If a girl is entertaining a week-end guest and she is invited to some social affair, is she privileged to bring her guest with her?

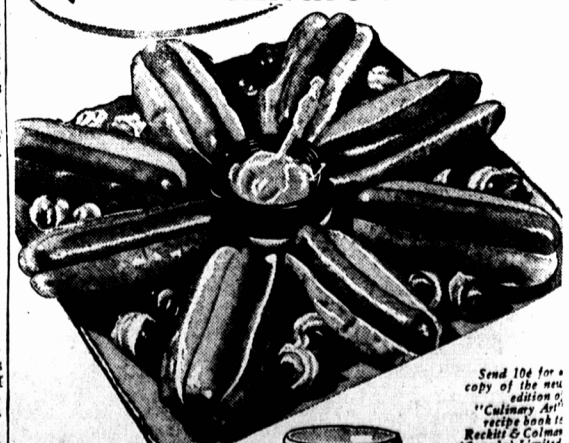

A. Only when permission of the hostess has been asked in advance.

Q. At a public dinner, where the speaker's table is long and narrow, should the chairman or toastmaster sit at the end of the table?

A. No; he should sit in the center, at the side — the principal speaker of the evening at his right.

Cardinal Richelieu, then only 22, needed a Papal dispensation before being consecrated bishop of Lucon in 1607.
