

Frontier Life Begins Anew For Russians

(By SHERWOOD DICKERMAN) LONDON Reuters — Russia has sent a wave of pioneers marching toward the Soviet Union's eastern prairies with the ringing words — "Go east, young man!" The great hall of the Kremlin resounded recently with praise of frontier life as Premier-Georgi Malenkov and other high Russian officials said goodbye to the first contingent of new settlers, and exhorted other youths to follow them. The mass rally, also attended by Foreign Minister Molotov, was called as a send-off for a group of factory workers and technical students who left for remote Kazakhstan on the Chinese border. Borrowing phrases that inspired the covered-wagon trains of American pioneers, Communist youth leaders urged other city dwellers to follow the departing team. "Campfires under an open sky," and the "timeless lure of new lands" were thrown into a vision of frontier days by young speakers in the Kremlin's ornate hall, Moscow radio reported.

The Open Sky

"Is it not around the first pitched tent that towns spring up in deserts?" one speaker demanded, "not around a fire, under the open sky, that the first builders of Komsomolok-on-Amur, Magnitogorak and the hydro-electric power plants held their first meetings?" Other speakers claimed that 3,000 youths from Moscow Province and 8,000 from the vast Ukraine grain belt have volunteered to "go east." They will work on 125 new state grain farms to be set up within the next few years in the eastern prairies. Kazakhstan, second largest of the Soviet Union's 16 republics, was the scene of a government, shake-up two weeks ago. The Russian press has emphasized recently the need to increase food production in undeveloped "new lands" east of Russia proper.
