

ELECTED PRESIDENT

Mrs. Keith Rand Will Address W.I. Convention

The following article is from the Federated News. A word portrait of the lady who has been chosen to the high office of President of the Federated Women's Institutes of Canada is not easy to paint; not because of insufficiency of excellent material, but because of the inadequacy of words to do her justice.

The facts and figures of her life do not tell the story. To read that Jennie Elizabeth Magee was born on Church Street, Kings County, Nova Scotia, leaves out the interesting fact that she lives in the same house today. To say that her ancestors back further than she can remember were Nova Scotians, leaves out the fact that she is the fifth generation Magee to live on that soil after the first one of that name came to Nova Scotia from Magee Island off the coast of Ireland. Her mother, a pioneer worker in Women's Institutes, was of a Scottish Covenanter family who were United Empire Loyalists.

Her early education, Grades one to eight, was obtained in a one-room school at Town Plot, where she now teaches a building easily seen from the east windows of her home. Her high school and university education were obtained in the nearby town of Wolfville, and from the front lawn of her home you see across the Cornwallis River the white front and tower of the Administration Building of Acadia University, Wolfville.

Teaching was her first career, but not entirely satisfied with it, she added a Business Course at the Maritime Business College, and worked for a year in Halifax in the office of the Department of Education there. Her third move combined her talents as a teacher and a business woman, when she taught in the Business Department of Horton Academy of Acadia University for five very successful years. Six years ago, when the teacher shortage became acute, she returned to teaching in the school she first attended.

She was married in 1941. It was a war marriage, not to a uniformed newcomer, but to the neighbor's son, her childhood sweetheart, Keith Rand, a graduate of the Nova Scotia Agricultural College then serving in the Canadian Army at Aldershot, N.S. His Welsh ancestors, shipbuilders and farmers, may have known the Magee forebears in their times and other places. In his happy home are two bonnie children, Jonathan, twelve and Michael, ten; both members of H Clubs.

A visit to the Rand home is a visit to a happy home.

Pump's Flow Terminated - Repairs Have Taken Place

"And to think that of all days, the sun just won't shine on this one!" Mack said with some disappointment in his tones, coming by a bit past noon today, the school-picnic ahead. This old house was being stirred from its dreaming then, disturbed by a pair of workmen, who had moved into its cellar regions, to try to discover what had suddenly terminated our (water) pump's flow, one evening of late.

This cessation was naturally a trying experience to the housewives who must assemble their meals with the aid of a hotplate or with little fire in their stoves, and who caught surprised expressions in mirror or window, the many times they out of habit came to open this or that tap in their work round about. As good fortune had it and because of James' wish not to be dependent on one source of supply only, the pump in the yard was adjusted to hand-operation to take care of our needs in the interim. And old processions were renewed; pails were pumped and carried to houses, to piggeries, to chickens, and to those of the cattle-kind that still remain housed in the stable. And "It's well that it's summer with most of the stock on pasture by a stream," we said.

As it turned out there was nothing more than a parted "spear-rod" to contend with. And since in the presence of the pair of workmen, the housewives seized the opportunity to have this or that useless electrical appliance about, repaired or adjusted, as well as the pump-warrant renewed against the wintry days ahead, we felt that after all it was not entirely an ill wind that had blown in upon us of late.

"It's like an illness that put poor grandfather to bed" we laughed to Jeanie. "If it did take away some attention from him, it gave the rest of the family an opportunity to have his doctor attend to all their aches and their pains."

The lack of water in the taps was inconvenient at the time but when repairs had been effected, and again the water gushed cool and, as it happened crystal-clear, how wonderful it seemed. We thought of your Sabbaths and a dark-frocked, saintly minister of old advising, indeed pleading with the "ungraced" of their flock to come with them to taste of the living Water from that Fountain which they themselves knew so well.

Shows, yes but not enough to dim the spirits or lessen too much the anticipations of the children and parents of the school down the River Road, who in the afternoon forgathered to a distant park-shore and the picnic. It proved to be, as always, an enjoyable outing, and in the house across the lane, they were satisfied youngsters though a little weary who sought their beds in the dusk. They look forward happily to instruction from their same teacher when classes once more reconvene. "I wonder now if that will be during Old Home Week?" the disturbing thought struck Mack this evening. He shook his head soberly. "Now don't tell me that he said. And this week? It is one of Summer's own. How smartly the perfumed hours are up and away. Until tomorrow — — — Diary Good-night.
