

UPSWEEP HAT LINE

The upswep turban complements the chemise as well as other costume lines so well that it emerges as a major millinery trend. From Leslie James of California comes an interesting example of the upswep turban, this one of white silk organdie, striped with lemon yellow Milan straw. The swirling tiered effect of the crown is decorative and different.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Easter Is A Joyous Christian Festival

"The snow doesn't seem to thaw much these days. Oh, it's going some of course, but there's still quite a bit in places on the fields" the younger farmer offered a while ago when he came by to pick up the newspaper before homing to the house across the lane.

"I know it didn't feel too much like spring along the fields this afternoon" James agreed. "He had been of a mind to leave the wood-cutting to younger hands this afternoon, deserting it in favor of attending to lighter chores of the farm. He went by horse and sleigh to feed that part of the flock of sheep that houses at another barn. In the good hauling obtaining, he would take with him sufficient hay to do for a day or two's feed and so save that stored there for any indifferent hauling ahead.

"Perhaps, Ellen" he had suggested with an accompanying smile "when I get the horse hitched, you will give me a hand with the loading."

It was pleasant there in the barnyard, sheltered as it was from the biting north wind which blew down over the fields, the sun warm, and thawing the yard there in the lee of the buildings. "Round up a couple of forks Ellen" he nodded briskly, setting down horse and sleigh by the door.

"You'll have to keep an eye out" he grinned, "I'll not warrant there's no mouse in this" he said placing first sizable forkful on the sleigh. "Now, climb up on that and tramp it," he offered turning back within the barn for more.

"Will the horse move?" we asked anxiously, stepping up. We do miss the steady old mare and every tried and true horse of the farm down the years.

"No — not until I pick up the reins, or one of us asks him to go."

Summer was in the bundles, smile of haying — sun and warm wind, and delectable scent of that season. And we sighed, not the haste of present-day harvesting with the machine nonchalantly picking up the windrows, but the leisure of young days and wagons with their quaint shavings, a knowing old mare, each forkful lifted and settled "well and truly" by hand on the rising load.

I'll put this in the centre to bind it on" James said presently of a bundle he brought. "Now, jump on it — it may take another there. I don't believe, Ellen" he said noting our efforts "you have the spring of once! Or else, you lack practise of late. You should take long walks every day. There's nothing better to give one good wind and muscle."

"He's as happy as a dead duck!" isn't he!" Mack commented com-
