

Happenings of The Week

London, August 31 — (CP) — In a west end salon, Aage Thaarup, the royal milliner, is giving final touches to hat designs he says will make front-page news when Princess Elizabeth starts her Canadian tour.

Information on the royal wardrobe is closely guarded and if a fashion writer tried to divine Elizabeth's choice, one possibility would be a wattleau bonnet in peony red felt and black velvet.

Another likely model is a light-weight helmet-style in honey-colored velvet with an upward-scooped visor brim finished in matching petal-shaped feathers.

Thaarup said his fall designs seek to create a "shaggy" effect. This is achieved by use of long-haired bearskin felt, such as that used for the black riven worn by the Princess when she took the King's place at the last "trooping the color" ceremony, or by ruffled velvet and twists of chenille.

A design of the future, in Thaarup's opinion, is the shallow, forward movement typical of a Dresden shepherdess, the line rising smoothly to winged points on either side of the high crown.

Willis - Coles Wedding

St. John's Anglican Church, Milton, was the scene of a pretty wedding at six o'clock on Thursday evening, August 31st, when Miss Thelma Ruth Coles, daughter of Mrs. Eric Coles and the late Eric Coles, was united in marriage with Mr. Glydon Willis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Willis, of Charlottetown.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. E. Piercy, rector of the Church, before an altar tastefully decorated with snapdragon, sweet-peas, phlox and potted ferns. Mr. Horace Coles, brother of the bride played the wedding music and during the signing of the register Mr. Gordon Carew sang "O Perfect Love."

Given in marriage by her grandfather, Mr. Alexander MacRae, the bride looked lovely in a train-length gown of white satin with lace yoke, fitted bodice trimmed with pearls, and full skirt. Her finger-tip veil of nylon net and lace was held in place by a coronet of seed pearls and she carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses.

The bride's attendants were her cousins, Miss Shirley Carew, maid of honor in mauve net over taffeta with matching head dress and mitts, carrying a bouquet of yellow poms, and Miss Gladys Hooper as bridesmaid wore yellow net over taffeta with matching head dress and mitts. She carried a bouquet of mauve poms. The winsome three-year-old flower girl, Karen MacRae, also cousin of the bride, wore pink nylon sheer over taffeta with matching mitts and a halo of flowers. She carried a nosegay of roses.

The groom was attended by his brother, Mr. Melvin Willis. The ushers were Mr. Orville Willis, brother of the groom, and Mr. Millard Coles, cousin of the bride. Mrs. Coles chose for her daughter's wedding a gown of navy blue sheer with navy blue accessories and a corsage of pink roses. The groom's mother was attired in mauve crepe with black accessories and a corsage of cream roses. Following the ceremony a reception was held for seventy invited guests to which the ladies of the North Milton Women's Institute capably catered. The bride's table was centered with a three-tier wedding cake in a floral setting, and silver bowls of sweet peas and white tapers. Mrs. Percy Hooper and Mrs. Roy Coles, aunts of the bride, poured tea with Mrs. Horace Willis, aunt of the groom, and Mrs. Elmer MacRae relieving.

The toast to the bride was proposed by Rev. A. E. Piercy and responded to by the groom. Immediately after the reception Mr. and Mrs. Willis left on a honeymoon trip to Boston, the bride travelling in a suit of burnt almond gabardine with matching accessories and carrying a yellow topper. Her corsage was of yellow roses.

On their return they will reside in Kensington where the groom is employed. Previous to her marriage the bride was entertained at a shower given by her friends in the community hall which she received many beautiful gifts of linen, crystal, china and silver.

MORE ABOUT THE NEW DRUG FOR ANGINA PECTORIS

When a severe vise-like pain occurs suddenly under the breastbone sometimes extending over to left shoulder and occasionally down the left arm, it may be a sign of a failing heart. It indicates a lack of oxygen in the blood that is supplying the heart muscle itself.

This pain is called angina pectoris or breast pang and usually brings fear, sometimes a fear of impending death to the individual, until he gets used to it. The immediate treatment is complete rest until the attack passes, which is usually a matter of minutes. For many years patients with angina pectoris have depended upon small tablets of nitro-glycerin, 1/100 grain or less, placed under the tongue.

Several months ago I wrote about a new drug for angina pectoris called khellin, a pure crystalline derivative of the eastern Mediterranean plant Amni visnaga which appears to be more powerful and just as safe as nitroglycerin. In New England Journal of Medicine, Drs. H. L. Aschner, K. H. Katz and D. J. Wagner report their experience with khellin in patients with well-established angina pectoris, selected from the heart clinic of the Boston City Hospital. Carefully controlled observations were made on 26 men and six women, ranging in age from 49 to 81 years. Of the 32 patients, 25 had a decrease in frequency and severity of angina pectoris, a decrease in nitroglycerin requirements and he was able to take more exercise before bringing on the pain. This improvement was considered pronounced in 11 patients, moderate in 11 and slight in four; the remaining six showed no improvement.

The average dose given was 160 mg. daily; no serious toxic (poisonous) reactions were encountered. The high proportion of favorable results, together with the striking degree of improvement frequently observed, led to the conclusion that khellin, properly used, is a safe and effective drug for the treatment of angina pectoris.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Keep Your Friends

Engaged Couple Should Not Sever All Former Ties

DEAR MISS DIX: Am I selfish to expect my fiancé to give up his friends for me? We always seem to be arguing over this problem, as he feels free to go out with them the nights he is not with me—which is about three or four nights a week. However, he does not approve of me going out with girl friends. I think we should both give up our friends except for an occasional visit or a double date. I can't understand how a man who is engaged can go out for good times with the boys. Will he settle down when we are married?

ANSWER: A happy medium is the best solution to your problem—as it is to almost every thing. Most engaged couples become so wrapped up in each other that all former friends are neglected and eventually lost—a most unwise policy. The glamour of romance doesn't last very long and it soon becomes apparent that two people cannot be as

Modern Etiquette

Q. Is it all right to give checks for wedding presents? A. Near relatives can do this. And the check should be made out to the bride alone in her maiden name, or in the names of both John and Ruth Jones. Q. When a woman is playing golf with a man, does she always drive first, whether the honor is hers or his? A. The woman must abide by the rules of the game, and she drives first only when it is her honor.

Cook's Corner

TWINKIES

These are made something like pancakes, delicious when filled with extracts and whipped cream. 2 egg whites, 1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract, 1/4 teaspoon almond extract, 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 cup sifted flour, 1/3 cup butter, melted and cooled.

Beat egg whites until foamy. Add extract and salt. Continue beating until stiff. Sprinkle sugar over them a little at a time and fold into beaten whites carefully after each addition. Fold in the flour lightly. Fold in the melted margarine. Brush cookie sheets with melted butter and dredge in flour. Place cookie sheets in 450-degree oven for 2 to 3 minutes, or until they are hot. Drop batter by tablespoonful on the hot cookie sheet, spreading it as thin as possible. (About the size of a small pancake.) Bake Twinkies in a 450-degree oven until lightly browned, about 5 minutes. Remove from oven and roll, while still hot, around the handle of a wooden mixing spoon. When cold, serve plain, dusted with confectioner's sugar, or filled with a mixture of whipped cream and crushed fruit.

Since eggs vary in size and the thickness of whites, bake a trial Twinkie. If it is so thin it breaks when you roll it, add a tablespoon flour to the batter. If the Twinkie is thick, add a little more melted butter. This makes six Twinkies.

How Can I!!!

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I clear up water which has a milky appearance? A. Dissolve a piece of rock alum about the size of a lima bean in a pint of boiling water. This much will purify one tub of water. Q. How can I make tough meat, or corned beef, more tender? A. A tablespoonful of vinegar, or a teaspoonful of lemon juice, added to the tough meat while it is boiling or roasting, will make it more tender.

The Royal Edinburghs

BY MARGARET SAVILLE

Many young Canadians will recognize the familiar pattern of their own post-war married life traced again in the early history of the Royal Edinburghs. As there was no suitable residence available for them in London, the newly-wedded pair had to make their first home at Buckingham Palace with the other members of the Royal Family.

True they had their own suite of rooms but instead of being left entirely to themselves there, they had to join the King and Queen at luncheon and dinner and also to take part in the general fire-side evenings and appear when friends and relatives were entertained.

Official visitors expected to greet the young Royal couple too and then Princess Margaret who had always shared her sister's life so closely would often come for Elizabeth to "do this" or "help with that" just as she had done in the past.

Prince Philip soon became the object of comment from the older Court officials who were unaccustomed to such a breezy and unconventional young man about the Palace. He transgressed their rigid ideas of etiquette on many occasions, driving his own open roadster, going hatless, carrying his own parcels and doing num-

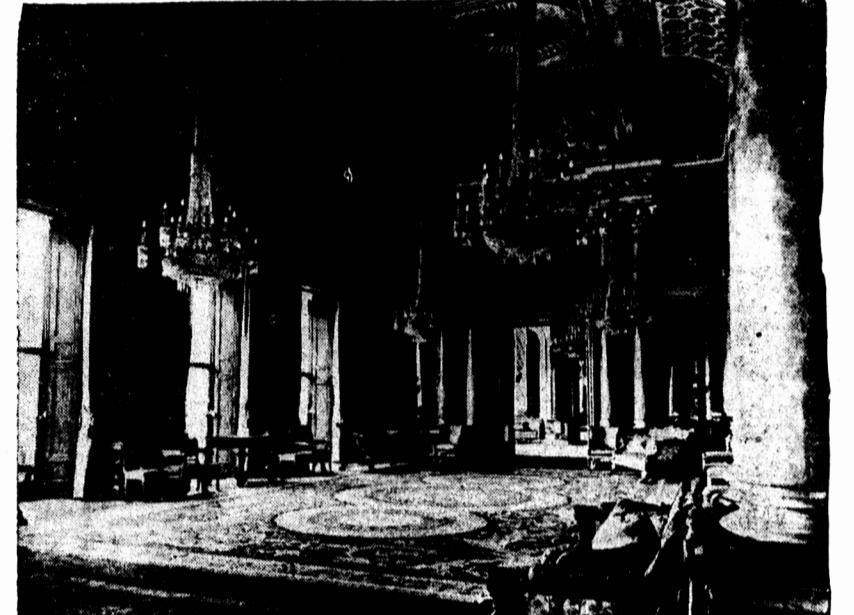

So the young Royal Edinburghs had to make their accommodation as they found it. Their hundreds of wedding gifts were stored away for in some cases loaned out for display to the public at exhibitions in aid of charity.

The best Princess Elizabeth could do was to set out some of her lamps and vases on the ancient gilt and use her pretty new services when she and her husband had breakfast or tea alone together.

Both the Royal Edinburghs must have heaved sighs of relief when the King was officially advised that it would be possible to re-occupy the Clarence House of St. James's Palace as a residence for them. Even so they had to wait many months before they could move in.

Materials were difficult to obtain in London and skilled workmen scarcer still. There were hitches and delays and once a strike and in the meantime their first child was born at Buckingham Palace. Princess Elizabeth had temporarily returned to the little blue and white bedroom she had used as a girl. "I should like my baby to be born among all the things I knew," she had explained firmly.

Prince Charles did not arrive until nine o'clock at night. Din-erous other things the stiff code did not consider correct. He would relax in flannels and a blue knitted sweater or an open-necked shirt, attire which had certainly never been seen in the Royal Apartments before. He also sang loudly in his bath which did not amuse certain occupants of the Palace as much as it did Princess Elizabeth.

She herself had none of the fun of housekeeping nor even of arranging her own rooms. All the furnishings at Buckingham Palace are heirloom, the property of the State, and cannot be removed. For the Palace is not a house belonging to the King. It is an official place of residence controlled by the British Government and the monarch who is ruling occupies it during his reign, relinquishing it in turn to the King or Queen who follows.

Morning Smile

Had Good Reason

The talkative lady was telling her husband about the bad manners of an acquaintance who had recently paid her a visit. "If that woman yawned once while I was talking to her," she said, "she yawned 11 times." "Perhaps she wasn't yawning, dear," the husband said, "maybe she wanted to say something."
