The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1NT	Pass	3NT

Opening lead—five of spades.

Let's say you're declarer with the South hand at three notrump. West leads a spade and you win the eight with the queen.

The hand looks like a breeze, since you figure to make two spades, four diamonds (after forcing out the ace), and four clubs for a total of ten tricks.

So, at trick two, you lead the queen of diamonds which East wins with the ace. Back comes a spade. You win it, cash your clubs, and then play the jack of diamonds — West showing out.

This is a disappointment, since you had counted on four diamond tricks and now have only two, and, what's more, you had expected to make a total of ten tricks and now have only eight.

So you abandon diamonds and play a heart towards the queen, hoping that it wins — which would give you nine tricks—but, unfortunately, West rushes up with the ace, cashes his spades, and you are down one.

If you wanted to, you could charge the hand up to bad luck and forget about it, but if you studied the matter very carefully, you'd realize there was a better way of playing the hand that would have made the contract.

It's all a matter of taking the right outlook at the beginning of the hand. Obviously, if the diamonds are divided 3-2, the play presents no problem. So what you do is assume the diamonds are divided 4-1, perhaps 5-0, and take whatever steps are possible to overcome that distribution if it exists.

At trick two you play a club to the queen and return a diamond towards the jack. (If East goes up with the ace, your worries are over.) Then you play the nine of clubs to the ten and return a diamond to the queen.

Having gotten both diamonds past East, you are now up to eight sure tricks. You abandon further diamond play when West shows out on the second diamond lead. You simply lead a heart at this point and thus assure the contract.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
