In loving memory of Aeneas MacLellan who died September 11, 1954. A year has passed since that sad day When you left without goodbyes. We often stop and think of you As tears of memory dim our eyes. You little thought when leaving home You would no more return That you so soon in death would sleep. And leave us here to mourn. Sometimes his hard to understand Why some things have to be But in His Wisdom, God has planned Beyond our power to see. Sadly missed by his Family

In loving memory of my father Mr. Frank E. Watia who passed away Sept. 10th, 1954. God saw what was before you And the pain you had to bear; So smiling down upon you, He took you in his care. Your weary hours and days of pain, Your troubled nights are passed, And in my aching heart I know You have found sweet rest at last. Looking back with tenderness Along the path we trod, I bless the year I had with you And leave the rest with God. Sadly missed by daughter Laura.

In loving memory of Sandy MacKenzie, Dover, who passed away September 9, 1947. Thoughts drift back to days gone past, Life moves on but memories last, Deep in our hearts our memory is kept, We who loved him will never forget. Lovingly remembered by Father, Mother, Sisters and Brothers.

SINGAPORE (AP)—Customs officers seized 250 pounds of opium from Communist Junk Wednesday night aboard a junk in Singapore harbor. The drug, valued at more than $40,000, was the first seized here from Red China in years. Two smugglers were arrested.

Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan (Copyright)

DIVINE GUIDANCE IS NEEDED IN DARK

Within a few days school bells will ring again and thousands of students, shepherded by thousands of teachers, will return to the classrooms, resuming the vocation they laid aside for the summer.

To many, to most perhaps, the vocation of a teacher is rather a mystery. The average mother or father, struggling with the problems presented by only a few children, wonders perhaps why so many men and women devote themselves to a life which means a complete dedication to children and their problems, a complete dedication to all the children in a class or a school, and not just a few, and those the nearest and dearest.

Certainly material gain is not the motivating force in the choice of a teaching career; it is only recently that the teacher, skilled craftsman that he is, has received a wage even approaching the true value of his work. Nor does anyone consider the teacher's job an easy one, with the continual drain on the nerves, the continual effort required to keep vital and attractive to students who inevitably will become, at one time or other, lethargic and recalcitrant and unappreciative.

If asked why they took up the art of teaching as a profession, most teachers would have difficulty in explaining, because such an explanation would demand a revelation of impulses of which they themselves are not even aware.

Many, among them the great numbers of priests, religious brothers and nuns who, each, would answer that they want to "build Christ in the hearts of children"; for to them that is the only meaning education can have, the forming of the mind and heart of Christ in the child.

And they are working for the reward that is promised in Holy Scripture to the teacher thus devoted: They that shall instruct others unto justice shall shine as stars for all eternity." (Dan. 12.) And they would explain, if asked that their teaching, even of subjects which seem to have no connection with religion, is but the overflow of their lives of consecration to God.

DIVINE IMAGE To love God perfectly is to love God's creatures, especially those whom He has made in His own image. And to love these persons who are made in the image of God means, for the teacher, to strive to develop in each person those faculties of intellect and will in which that divine image shines.

Charity, love, is the greatest of the virtues. And the greatness of the art of teaching lies in this wonderful fact, that teaching is itself an act of love, an act of giving, an act by which the pupil is given a power that the teacher has. The real teacher gives more than a fact or an answer; the real teacher gives a thirst for truth, an eagerness to learn, a habit of mind that will continue as a perfection of the student long after the mere facts of history or mathematics or literature have been forgotten. It is not hard to see, then, why so many religious communities of men and women exercise their love of God in the work of teaching. And what makes their teaching different, and the teaching of lay people whose lives are in many cases just as completely dedicated to the love of God as the lives of religious, is this: The things taught, the habits learned, the minds are centred by love in God, have been "filtered," as it were, through the holiness of the teacher. The lesson in mathematics has been taught, but it has been taught with patience, with kindness, with justice, and it has been motivated by love. The pupil has learned knowledge, but he has also experienced—without realizing it—a gentle but firm discipline. Thus is answered the prayer of the psalmist which might well be the prayer of every student: "Teach me goodness, discipline and knowledge." (Psalm 118)

NATURAL MOTIVES But there are powerful natural motives for teaching, too, and these are important, even in a religious teacher. First of all, teaching is a continuation of God's creation; it is a bringing to perfection of the powers which God implanted in the child. Whether he admits it or not, the teacher allows his powers of intellect and speech and action to be secondary causes as God continues His creative process in the development of the student's intellectual powers. Because teaching is thus creative, God attaches to it a great joy; good teachers love to teach, because teaching is, in fact, a share in the creative love and joy of God.

Another reason for the joy which teachers experience in their work is the scope that teaching gives to the development of the personality, and to the practice of the virtues. Nothing "expands" us more, takes us out of ourselves more, than continual and intimate contact with other persons who depend on us, draw on us. And teaching puts us in contact with other persons at an age when they need us most, when their minds are starving for the truth which God meant them to grasp, and which the teacher alone can give them. Their hearts are awakening to a wider love, and it is the teacher who, after the parent, holds before the boy and girl the persons and things most worthy of love and respect.

In the truest sense, "character" is the complex of virtues and vices which an individual possesses. The dedicated teacher has an opportunity rarely found in other professions to develop the highest virtue. The act of teaching, itself is an act of charity, a giving; the spirit of poverty grows as the salary remains inadequate; the demands on patience are endless; experience in counseling and disciplining bring prudence; the intimate contact with countless children over the years brings a deep understanding. All these virtues, and more, are God's gift to those who really make of their teaching a vocation, a dedication of self to others.

As our teachers enter the classrooms this fall, may God guide and strengthen them as they continue His work in perfecting the minds and hearts of our children.

Enters On Full Time Church Activities

A dedication ceremony observing the entrance of Miss Mary Morrison (above) into the full time work of the church will take place at the evening service on Sunday at Trinity United Church. Miss Morrison attended Prince of Wales College for three years and was for two years on the teaching staff of Prince Street School. She attended the last term of University at Mount Allison and will next two years will attend Emmanuel College, Toronto. During the summer months she has been doing extension work for the church in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia.

Miss Morrison has always been interested in the work of the church. Possessed of fine musical talents she has for a number of years given leadership in Young Peoples' work, the Sunday School and the Mission Band. In addition to this she has been a faithful member of Trinity Choir for several years and has taken an active part in church dramas.

She is the daughter of Mrs. Morrison and the late Rev. D.W. Morrison who held pastorates at Hampton and Bradalbane, Prince Edward Island.

To Feature P.E.I. Products

A display of Island grown and processed foods will feature the activities of every grocery store in the Province during the week Sept. 12-17 inclusive, according to an announcement made by president Henry MacWilliam at the monthly dinner meeting of the Junior Board of Trade, held at the Rendezvous restaurant.

The object of this all-out endeavour is to more fully acquaint island people with local products and to stimulate the purchase of what is grown or processed here.

President MacWilliam also announced that arrangements have been completed for a meeting of the Maritime Junior Boards of Trade to be held here on Oct. 21 and 22, which will bring together representatives from every Junior Board in the Atlantic Provinces.

Plowing Trophy

Mr. Leslie Hunter, president of the Provincial Plowing Association, announced at Bridgetown last evening that a new cup has been donated by the Maritime Implement Dealers Association of Truro, N. S., for the Provincial championship of the Junior tractor competition in a special Provincial class to include the first and second prize winners at Fundas and Pownal in the regular class for 1953.

Mr. Hunter stated that the cup would be competed for on an annual basis, with the winner receiving the cup for one year, after which he would receive a replica or some other token of the championship for permanent possession.

Survey of Crops

OTTAWA (CP)—Prairie grain harvesting is going ahead rapidly under "almost ideal weather conditions," the bureau of statistics reported Wednesday in a cross-country crop survey.

Grain yields in the Maritime Provinces seem to be below average. In Prince Edward Island pastures and potatoes have maintained heavy growth. In New Brunswick, a good crop of early potatoes has been dug and a blight on late potatoes is under control. A full apple crop is expected in most parts of Nova Scotia.

Quebec weather in August provided favorable growing conditions, but dryness in June and July has reduced grain crops in nearly all regions. Pastures have revived and milk production is normal in most districts. Potatoes, other vegetables and tobacco are promising.

Addressed Halifax Meeting On Marketing Legislation

Speaking yesterday at the Institute of Public Administration of Canada which is holding its annual meeting at Halifax, Mr. J. Lincoln Dewar, Secretary of the Prince Edward Island Federation of Agriculture, dealt with problems relating to marketing legislation which he said were the result of the depression and the Government's decision to assist farmers in doing something for themselves.

"With all classes today a strong drive to achieve security of one form or another and there is still in the minds of many a haunting fear of depression," Mr. Dewar said. "This fear is of course shared by the farmer. I believe it would be rash to assume that there will be no more depressions."

Mr. Dewar maintained that from a practical and political standpoint country farmers cannot logically be asked to accept the full impact of depression or recession at a time when other groups are being cared for by unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation, public works programs and numerous other plans.

"Therefore I suggest that any agricultural policy worthy of the name must include some public safeguard against general depression; and while price support programs may not be the answer, they would appear at the moment to be the most practical and the most effective."

DEPRESSION YEARS

The speaker went on to trace the history of the agricultural economy during the fifteen years previous to the Natural Products Marketing Act passed in 1934. He pointed out that farm prices had fallen severely in a nation heavily dependent on the exports of primary products. Not only had farm incomes declined from 1920-1922 but the recovery in raw material prices to 1929 had been modest. The depression began in 1929 and from then until 1933, intensified.

Mr. Dewar recalled that from 1935-1949 Canada had no Marketing Act. Wartime conditions and wartime controls with ample markets for practically all products had quieted the demand on the part of the provinces for legislation which would provide control over inter-provincial and export trade. The solution in law was found in the now famous Bill 82 passed in 1949. It makes possible the extension into inter-provincial and export trade the powers which provincial Boards may exercise in their own Province.

"While in general there has not been marked opposition to placing the legislation on the Provincial statute books, nevertheless very few schemes under the legislation have been put into effect or operated without spirited opposition and in some cases plebiscites have been more stirring and more strongly contested than Provincial elections. One prominent British Columbia farmer still bears to this day the scar of a knife wound received in enforcing the regulations of a vegetable marketing scheme. Other farmers' rights across Canada bear emotional scars which while not externally visible have been just as real and just as painful.

SELF-HELP PROGRAMS

"Marketing legislation was placed on the statute books to assist the farmers in developing self help programs in marketing. Price support legislation should in the opinion of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture provide a minimum level of return per unit of production enabling the most representative group of producers to continue in production.

"It should facilitate orderly production adjustments within agriculture and prevent undue fluctuation of market prices and production. Farmers—at least the organized portion of them—do not expect any society to subsidize the indifferent producer. It is important to emphasize that minimum level of return to the producer does not give the farmer a fair living wage.

"It would appear that while many farmers still wish to protect their right to make their own mistakes, the future will see a greater and more varied use of Marketing Boards which, while not the only possible means of improvement in marketing, have at the moment focused on them more than ordinary public interest. The modest expenditures under price support schemes have protected the position of the farmers during a period when high risks and low returns might have exercised a discouraging effect upon producers and an expensive one upon consumers.

P.E.I. POTATO BOARD

Mr. Dewar dealt briefly with marketing boards across Canada. "Prince Edward Island's highly controversial Potato Marketing Board set up in 1950," he said, "has run through the entire scale of regulatory price fixing, and operating a central selling agency under an agreement with the Government of Canada based on the Agricultural Products Cooperative Marketing Act. This Board has carried on advertising programs, has assisted in disease control and in cooperation with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture established in the Supreme Court of Canada the validity of both the Provincial and Federal marketing legislation.

"The agreement referred to operated for the 1953 crop and resulted in a gross deficiency payment of almost two and one-half million to some six thousand island farmers. Finances for this Board were originally obtained under a levy, later declared ultra vires as an indirect tax by the Supreme Court of Canada. Later, licenses imposed on dealers and producers have proved to be a difficult and unsatisfactory method of raising Board funds."

Other speakers at the meeting included Mr. G.F. Perkins, Commissioner of Co-operatives and Marketing for Ontario, Prof. Drummond of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, and Mr. Shoyama of the Economic Board of Saskatchewan.
