Address and Presentation.

A large number of the parishioners of Kinkora and Seven Mile Bay parishes attended mass at St. Malachi's Church, Kinkora, on Wednesday morning last, and presented their late and beloved pastor, on his departure for Vernon River, with a well-filled purse and a beautiful address as a small token of the esteem in which he is held by the people of these parishes. We understand that the farewell sermon was feeling and pathetic, and made a deep impression on all present. Father Doyle is one of the most popular men—lay or clerical—in the province, and we do not wonder that the people of Kinkora take it so hard to lose his services, but that their loss is Vernon River's gain. Peter Duffy, Esq., read the following

Of the Parishioners of Kinkora and Seven Mile Bay, to the Rev. Patrick Doyle, D. D.:

DEAR REV. FATHER,—Your parishioners in the mission of Kinkora and Seven Mile Bay have learned with deep regret that you have decided to relinquish the Spiritual charge you have exercised for the last five-and-twenty years with an acceptableness unequalled, we hesitate not to say, by any other priest in the diocese, to assume the pastorate of the large and important parish of Vernon River. That this announcement should weigh down our hearts with sorrow could only be expected, especially when we had come to regard you, by reason of your long residence among us, and the oft-expressed preference of place and people, as well as by reason of all your works, as our while God would give you strength to exercise the sacred ministry,—and in the evening of life would have deemed it a happy privilege to have watched over and soled your declining years, you have, however, decided otherwise and whilst we may not venture to question the motives which have induced you to make the change, we cannot allow you to depart from us without giving expression to our deep sense of obligation for the faithful and self-sacrificing manner you have labored during all these years in our interests, spiritual and temporal.

To enumerate in any way the fruits and blessings of your long ministry, is a task to which we are altogether unequal, more particularly at a moment when all our thoughts are absorbed in the magnitude of our loss. You came to this straggling flock at a time when we required the services of a true missionary—a man of zeal, piety, courage and business administration, and your pastorate has disclosed all these qualities in an extraordinary degree. Not only have you been at all times ready to bring to your people the consolations of religion, but by your great exertion, in season and out of season, to make known and respect the teachings of that Church to which we have the signal happiness to belong, by your fervent, learned, eloquent and persistent exhortation to the practice of virtue, by your zeal and charity in correcting and improving "in all patience and doctrine" whenever correction or reproof were necessary, by the care you have always bestowed upon the instruction of the little ones, whom you regarded as the hope of the future, by your tender solicitude for the unfortunate of society, and, above all, by the aptitude you brought to the discharge of your duty in the public services of the Church, you have transformed these parishes into one of the most regular and practical bodies of Catholics in the diocese; and, as well as endearing yourself to your people, you have planted deep the foundations of those obligations which we can never hope to discharge, but which we must, nevertheless, be ever ready to acknowledge.

And the spiritual interests of these missions have not exhausted all your time and attention. Finding us dependent upon the poorest of church accommodation, and altogether unprovided with the simple essentials for the proper observance of the ceremonies of the ritual, you even, in a comparatively short time, enabled us to make an extensive addition to the church building, to erect a suitable tower, chancel and vestry, to finish, decorate and furnish the interior and to supply every requisite for the convenience and comfort of priest and people. The erection of a beautiful presbytery and a system of commodious and well arranged out-buildings, the planting and beautifying of the church grounds and cemetery and the general improvement of the parish lands are standing monuments to your industry and business capacity. You have been prominent too, in every movement undertaken in the public welfare. To your enterprise and foresight are due many, if not all, our great public conveniences and to your counsel, example and encouragement may be attributed, in a large measure, the general progress and prosperity that has blessed this section of our Island home. The schools you have established, improved and fostered speak eloquently of the wise and provident pastor always keeping the advancement of his flock in mind while nothing has been neglected to improve the condition and relieve the wants of the poor, whom according to the Great Pastor we always have with us. A true friend of our race, too, you have ever been ready to extend your own and excite our sympathy for our down-trodden countrymen across the water and
