

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Important items as family ties should never be the subjects of teasing. Someone should make your husband realize this or his son may easily become a nervous, bewildered little boy.

DEAR MISS DIX: Is it possible for older people really to fall in love? I know a woman who is apparently very much in love with a man she has known for years.

ANSWER: Who would be so presumptuous as to put an age limit on love? It may take different forms at different ages, or with different people, but folks are capable of loving all their lives.

The mutual devotion of older people is a perfect foundation for marriage; it will prove just a deeper manifestation and extension of their present friendship.

Miss Nissen cannot reply personally to readers but will answer problems of general interest through this column.

CHAPTER TEN

Part Three

Wilkins played the finish, and waited. Nothing happened. They sat there as if they were frozen, and then they began to talk, as if I wasn't there. He looked up at me, as if he was in a madhouse or something. I smiled at him, and bowed three times, the way I was taught, center, left, and right. Then I went over and poured myself a drink. When I turned around, Doris was leaving the room. She walked as if she had just gone blind.

I don't know how I got out of there. But pretty soon I was down on the twelfth floor, where you change from the private elevator which runs up to the penthouse, to the main cars. Cecil was there, with Wilkins. When she saw me they stopped talking. We went down, and on the street a cab came up. Wilkins offered us a lift, but he had a dinner date up town instead of down, so I told him to take the cab, and I sent the doorman after another one. He went off, and I stood there looking Cecil up and down, and decided she was what I wanted in the way of a woman and that I was going to hook up with her for the rest of my life. Maybe the love part wouldn't be so hot, anyway on my part but I had had all I wanted of that. She was decent, and you could stick to her and not feel you had a viper on your chest every time you put your arms around her. I hooked my arm in hers and pressed it.

The doorman came, riding the running board of the cab, and I put her in. I fished in my pocket to tip him, and heard the cab door slam. I looked up, and it was moving away and all I could see was a gloved hand waving at me from the window. In another second it was gone.

I started down the street. Then I wondered where I was going. Here I had just made a decision that was to change my whole life, and now it seemed to have evaporated into thin air. I crossed Park Avenue and heard a horn. My legs felt queer and I couldn't seem to walk straight. I remembered I had had four drinks. Then I heard myself laugh. It wasn't the four drinks.

I let myself into the house and the hall was dark, and upstairs I could hear Evelyn crying. I opened my mouth to call, and nothing came out of it. I groped for the switch. Then I heard a rustle behind me. I half turned, and felt something horrible coming at me, it hit me. She was moving like an animal and struck at my face with both hands at once. Those claws raked me. All the time she was talking to me, not loud, but in a terrible whisper:

"You would do that to me... you beast... you swine... you can have her... what do I care who you have... but that... Get out of here... Get out of here!"

Her voice rose to a scream at that and upstairs both children began to wail and I pushed her away, got the door open, and staggered down the steps to the street.

I spent that night at the nearest hotel. I had some dinner and I didn't know what I was eating. Then it was nine o'clock and there wasn't anything to do but go to bed.

I turned off the lights and tried to sleep. I didn't seem to be thinking about anything at all. But every time I'd drop off I'd wake up, dreaming I was standing there beside Greeny's piano, bellowing at the top of my lungs, and nobody would even turn around and look at me. Then one time this horrible thing was coming at me in the dark, and I woke up moaning.
