The Telegraph Editor Ends Long Career

By GERARD MCNEIL
QUEBEC (CP)—Oliva (Pop) Couture, who retired Thursday, has sent millions of words of press copy in many languages during a 47-year career with Canadian National Telegraphs.

The hours were long and the pay short until recent years. The work was hard but, the memories are delightful. Mr. Couture vividly recalls four short words he sent the Toronto Star for a reporter covering a murder trial in the Beauce in 1931.

The judge had picked up a serious case of fleas from the bearded, unwashed jury. The Star wanted to know why the reporter hadn't filed a story that day. The reporter replied: "Case suspended, judge jousy."

Like telegraphers the world over who handle press copy, Pop was the reporter's best friend. In the old days, when asbaithe, whiskey - blanc or caribou overcame one reporter, Pop pieced together an authentic-looking story from pool copy and wired it off to save the reporter's neck.

WAS GHOST WRITER

He worked from the Quebec legislature during most of his career, right from the days of the late premier Sir Lomer Gouin to the current provincial chief, Jean Lesage. The veteran telegrapher ghost-wrote many a story.

This backfired once. He had been filing copy for two weeks for a down-and-out correspondent for a Montreal daily. Pop dutifully wrote and sent a story one Saturday morning, signing the correspondent's name.

He didn't know the reporter had died the night before. "You can imagine the confusion that caused in the newspaper office," he said in an interview. Once the air had cleared, the daily gave him a free one-year subscription.

Now 65, he has covered every election campaign from 1916—when he earned $15 a month for a 10-hour six-day week, with $2.50 overtime on Sundays—to his retirement.

At times covering politics was murder. Never a drinker, he probably became a moderate as a result of his first campaign.

He travelled to one district in 30-below-zero weather and, aged 16, took a nip of whisky blanc from a reporter to thaw out.

The moment the warm air of the hotel hit him, he was out. Ace telegraphers like Pop went out on the campaigns because those in the small villages couldn't handle the deluge of press copy that were produced by dozens of reporters.

WORKED LONG HOURS

"We often worked 14, 15 hours a day, sending in French, English, Italian, German, even army and navy code during the First World War."

He flew to Blanc Sablon on the Labrador-Quebec boundary, and ate salt cod for eight days in 1917 while filling 1,000,000 words and 6,000 regular telegrams for the 53 reporters covering the crash of the German airship Bremen.

He found the late-premier Maurice Duplessis an agreeable travelling companion. In Roberval, Pop relates with pleasure, the premier cast an envious

Opening lead—king of hearts. The declarer's frame of mind—his approach to the play—has a tremendous amount to do with the success of his efforts. If he plunges ahead with the blind hope that finesses will work and that suits will break favorably, and make no provision for the possibility that things may not work out the way he would like them to, he is bound to find himself in hot water from time to time.

What declarer should do is try to shape his play so that he not only accomplishes his purpose if everything goes normally, but also accomplishes his purpose if matters develop abnormally.

This hand illustrates the point South can see that he is certain of making four spades if the diamonds are divided 3-2. All his thoughts should therefore be designed to overcome a 4-1 or 5-0 break, if it exists.

He does this by ruffing the second heart lead, drawing three rounds of trumps, and then playing a diamond to the king. At this point he is certain of making the contract regardless of the adverse distribution.

South no longer cares how the diamonds are divided because he can deal successfully with every possible combination. He assures the contract by leading the A-K and another club.

By now both dummy and declarer each have three diamonds and a trump. The opponent who wins the club will have to return a diamond or else yield a ruff and discard.

In the actual case, it is probably West who wins the club. If he returns the queen or jack of diamonds, declarer ducks and West is employed. If West returns the nine instead of the queen or jack, declarer likewise plays low from dummy, again being certain of the outcome.

If East is the player, with the diamond length and wins the club, he runs into the same dead end. There is no escape.
