Ceylon Acts To End Violence

COLOMBO, Ceylon (Reuter*)—Prime Minister Solomon Bandaranaike has warned parliament his government intends to wipe out race and language riots "once and for all." An official summary of Bandaranaike's remarks was issued Thursday. The prime minister addressed the house of representatives in closed session Wednesday night. Bandaranaike, who spoke during a seven-hour debate on emergency regulations introduced nine days ago to quell riots between Ceylon's Tamil and Sinhalese communities over language rights, blamed three groups in Ceylon for the troubles. The first two, he said, were sincere but mistaken people who felt their language, culture and race were at stake. Then there were thugs who were only interested in fomenting strife.

Invest, Not Save, Is Way

OTTAWA (CP)—Senator Ralph Horner said Thursday the principle of saving money to become wealthy is as out of date as the ox cart. The Saskatchewan Conservative senator made the statement in the Senate throne speech debate in taking sharp issue with speech Wednesday by Liberal Senator A. B. Baird of Newfoundland. Senator Baird said Canadians are losing their ancestral trait of saving and living within their means. "I can well sympathize with some of the ideas that he (Senator Baird) expressed because you grew up in the school where you save money to become wealthy," Senator Horner said. "But that principle is just as out of date as the oxen in comparison with the automobile today. "We must spend more to get rich today." Henry Ford was the first man to throw a monkey wrench into the idea of saving. Until this day, fathers had taught their sons to save, bought them a piggy bank and later opened a bank account. "But Henry Ford said that he did not want to teach his sons to save money. He wanted them taught to invest it wisely and that was a departure from the usual procedure."

EDUCATIONAL HORIZONS

Will The Teacher Be Part Of The Community?

This will be the last issue of "The Horizon" for the school year. Teachers and pupils will be looking forward to summer holidays and we hope that all will come back to school in the fall refreshed in mind and body. Some teachers will be signing new contracts and entering new districts. Parents and children will wonder about the new teacher. Will she be an understanding teacher? Will she become a part of the life of the rural community and enter into its activities or will she decide to be in the community from nine to four o'clock only each day? In these days of easy travelling many communities are finding themselves without the leadership of the teacher. Years ago the teacher stayed in the community and was the centre of community affairs. Has something of value been lost with the advent of paved roads and the automobile? Let us read the following story as given a year or two ago by an inspector in a neighboring province.

BACK AND FORTH

"Last summer, a young woman who has recently been graduated from teacher training urged me to recommend her to a certain superintendent of schools. This I did and she was engaged as teacher of a rural school. The ink was hardly dry on her contract when she came joyously to me and said, 'I am so glad I got that position. It is only thirty miles from home, and that's nothing with my speedy little car.'"

"Oh, but," said I, anxiously. "You certainly aren't thinking of going back and forth each day! That's a nice little community with several comfortable places to board."

"I'm not going to board out there," she answered. "I have a jolly set of friends and I don't intend to miss all their good times. School doesn't begin until nine o'clock and is out at four. I'll hardly mind being out there as long as that. I suppose," she continued, with a far away sort of calculating look in her eye, "I'll have to stay there for lunch!" And then, as if a bright idea had occurred to her, she added, "But I can correct papers and fill out my plan book at home, so I'll seldom have to take any work home with me!"

"What have I done?" I almost said out loud. "Where are all those lofty aspirations she recited to me so soulfully when soliciting my aid? Is the girl interested in anything but figuring out how little time she can spend to earn as much as she can persuade the school board to pay?"

"Well, spring came and my young friend greeted me rather anxiously. 'I really don't know whether they will ask me to come back,' she said. 'Somehow, they don't seem very cordial but, of course, I don't know them very well.'"

"So you boarded at home after all?" I asked. "Oh yes, I never did get around to moving out," she said. "It's really great fun riding back and forth, and I've never been late except a few times when it rained hard."

"Oh say," she exclaimed, as I thought thoughts too deep, or at least too unsuitable, for utterance turned away, "if they don't reject me, will you help me to get another place?"

"Maybe," I said out loud this time. "Maybe not. We'll have a good long talk first, anyway." The gist of that talk will be that I shall never recommend another teacher to a rural position who, if a reasonably good boarding place can be found, will not agree to live in the community. And that is the end of the story. You may or may not agree with the substance and I suppose the content of the story could supply material for a good discussion as to whether a teacher's duties go beyond the confines of the four walls of the school-room.

PRAYER FOR A NEW SCHOOL

O God: Please make his teacher kind and good; hope she'll understand he's very small—
