Order Of Governor Is Spelling Doom For Casinos, Night Clubs

By WICK TEMPLE

HOT SPRINGS, Ark. (AP)—All the one - armed bandits stand like prisoners of war in a corner of The Vapors, their three eyes staring into darkness.

All over town, thousands of dry martini glasses glisten behind empty bars.

The action is gone. The party is over. For awhile at least.

Hot Springs, once a gay little mountain resort, has lost its battle to legalize gambling.

Arkansas voters turned down local option legal gambling for Hot Springs Nov. 3 by a vote of 318,229 to 215,744. The illegal casinos and night spots, already closed on order of Governor Orval E. Faubus, appeared doomed by the landslide.

But the people who were born here and grew up watching the sun set over the bright lights of the night spots will give odds that the last dice have not been thrown.

"This town has been closed before," said one inhabitant. "For one year, for four. It's always opened again. You'll see."

Meanwhile, businessmen are stunned. It's as if a war has been fought and lost.

BIG MONEY GONE

No longer do the big spenders set up vacation operations in suites in the venerable hotels and blithely drop thousands of dollars at the gambling tables.

The plush restaurants are serving fried chicken and $3 steaks instead of exotic dishes and $8 steaks.

Worst of all, perhaps, is the fact that over-the-bar liquor sales died with gambling. Mixed drinks, too, are illegal in Arkansas, and Arkansans finally stopped winking at the two practices that helped make Hot Springs wealthy.

But Hot Springs has young leaders who are fascinated with the cosmopolitan atmosphere that has characterized this mountain city of 30,000 persons.

One of them is Richard Wootton, a lawyer and president of the Chamber of Commerce.

"The first thing we've got to do is rebuild the tourist trade," he said. "And the most important thing there is to give the tourists something to do at night."

A group of business leaders has formed a corporation to operate The Vapors as a private club under a state "key club" law. Guests of Hot Springs hotels will get free memberships and the club will feature name entertainers and a bar, but no gambling.

NEEDS RACE CROWD

There is talk of building a dog racing track to supplement the seasonal economy of Oaklawn Park, the horse racing track. Oaklawn's 43-day season opens in February and Hot Springs must do something to provide night life before then or it will lose a big portion of its out-of-state racing crowd.

Hot Springs' economy had grown around four clubs that provided entertainment, dancing, dining and gambling

In addition, tourists flocked to thermal baths on bathhouse row in Hot Springs National Park. The 17 houses, using waters from warm springs deep under the mountains, give about 1,500,000 baths a year for health and relaxation.

GOES FAR BACK

With a few interruptions, gambling and drinking have bustled along here in violation of state law for almost a century. Local officials couldn't stay in office if they tried to crack down.

Early last year, the U.S. justice department declared Hot Springs the biggest illegal gambling operation in the country.

Yet two federal grand juries could find no violation of federal gambling laws.

The Arkansas house of representatives passed a resolution suggesting that the state anti-gambling law be enforced. Faubus said this was a mandate to him from the people, and he ordered Garland County officials to close gambling or he would use state police to do it.

State pressure finally closed the big casinos last March, but smaller clubs continued to operate, selling mixed drinks.

Just before the Nov. 3 general election, Faubus sent state police to raid one club. They grabbed three slot machines, liquor and a very surprised owner.

Immediately, the rest of the clubs closed The lid was on tight. Now only beer is sold.

Most city leaders agree that about 1,200 persons are out of work from casinos, bars, motels, hotels, restaurants and related businesses. Hotels have closed whole wings.

SEES BRIGHT SIDE

Cy King, operator of the Lamar Bathhouse and president of the Bathhouse Association, sees the problem this way:

"All Hot Springs has to do is continue its advertising and service. We've got to sell our baths, our recreation and our industrial potential."

He said the bathhouse business had not been hurt by the crackdown.

But the economy as a whole is slumping. Wootton said sales tax receipts were off 14 per cent in September.

The fight against the proposed constitutional amendment to legalize gambling was pushed by a group called Churches United Against Gambling, headed by Dr. Ralph Phelps, a Baptist minister and president of Ouachita Baptist College at Arkadelphia, 36 miles from Hot Springs.

"I think someday there will be gambling here," predicted Wootton.

But Hot Springs probably never again will make the mistake of putting all its golden eggs in one basket.

Canadian Finds Cuba Armed Camp

VANCOUVER (CP) — "Soldiers, police everywhere — all with guns. It gave me the Willies."

That was Dave Steen's impression of Cuba during a trip there last week to compete in the Havana international friendship track and field festival.

The young Canadian shotput star from Vancouver said he and the other Canadians left as soon as their events were over.

"Like an armed camp," said John Minichiello, the Canadians' coach.

"Men lounging around everywhere with guns, clicking the safety catches on and off, toying with the triggers; no sign of discipline or responsibility.

"Nervous? You bet I was," said Minichiello.

Steen Minichiello nad pole vaulter Gerry Moro of Trail, B.C., spent four days in Cuba to attend Havana track meet. They were glad to get back to Canada.

"I figured I'd better get out while I could," said Minichiello, who refused to stay until Dec. 27, as he and the Canadian athletes had been asked by Cuban athletic authorities.

Overweight And Diabetes Seen Linked

GENEVA (Reuters) — The World Health Organization said here there is unassailable evidence that overweight predisposes persons to sugar diabetes.

A report drawn up by a W.H.O expert committee on diabetes said that with greater food consumption, more obesity and less physical activity, the disease is increasing throughout the world.

There were notably less diabetes cases during the Second World War, in countries where food was rationed, than at present the report said.

The report also noted there seems to be a growing tendency for the disease to affect young working people

Some of the great plays you hear about are so far removed from what is generally considered normal that they are referred to as fancy plays. However, when you examine these plays closely, you usually find that they are entirely logical and that the chief reason they are so designated is that they are unusual.

Today's deal features a play which many would class as fancy. We don't know whether the designation is correct, but we do know that the play was correct.

South won the spade lead with the king and had no choice but to attack clubs. He led the jack and played low from dummy, East permitting the jack to win.

Declarer led another club and then had to decide, when West played the nine, whether to finesse again. West had by now played the eight and nine.

It seemed to South that if West had had either the K-9-8 or K-10-8, he would have covered the jack on the preceding trick. Declarer therefore decided to credit East with the king and accordingly went up with the ace.

He then continued his good work by playing another club from dummy and discarding the ace of spades when East took the club with the king.

This extraordinary play guaranteed the contract beyond the shadow of a doubt. East, on lead, was bound to provide dummy with an entry to cash the clubs, regardless of which suit he returned or how the cards were divided.

Whether East led back a spade, a heart or a diamond, dummy was sure to obtain an entry in the suit that East elected to return.

Note that with any discard except the ace of spades, South would have gone down at least one.

Of course, South's play was highly unusual. And possibly it was also fancy. But whatever the play was, its greatest recommendation was that it was sure to do the job.
