

Well bear. The U.S. suggested an increase of 15 cents a bushel, on the assumption that under the laws of supply and demand the world price would go up by this amount.

Canada, however, refused to go along. The Canadian price has increased by eight cents a bushel in recent days—and could go up more. But the wheat board wisely is looking past the present temporary shortage. It believes that our traditional customers should not be charged sky-high prices merely because there is, temporarily, a seller's market in wheat. It believes that future sales of Canadian wheat should be protected, even at the expense of a quick profit today. There is also the danger that if the price of wheat were permitted to skyrocket, farmers might be induced to grow more wheat—what might tomorrow we might have difficulty selling.

It is not desirable to get at cross purposes with Washington on this or any other subject, but there is a limit to which Canadian acquiescence in American demands can go. The limit seems to have been reached in this case. The government at Ottawa, having made this decision, will be expected to stand firm on it.

A Point Well Taken

In the acrimonious debate on the status of the New Democratic Party and the divided Social Credit Party in the House of Commons last week, one speaker was singled out by the Ottawa Journal as contributing a useful and sensible point. He was Mr. Heath Macquarrie, junior MP for Queens, who maintained that the Social Credit problem should not have been brought before the committee at all, but left to the divided members to settle as best they could.

Mr. Macquarrie recalled to the committee that there is provision for facilitating the work of Parliament and ensuring that the House is not occupied with petty matters. The assumption is that parties will make their own decisions and then use "the usual channels" which are in fact the private meeting between representatives of the various parties to allocate seats and rooms, decide on spokesmen to be recognized and arrange the business of the House on amicable lines.

Without these "usual channels" Parliament would be bogged down with trivia. Intra-party feuds are not the business of Parliament but the "usual channels" of amicable discussion behind the scenes are neglected by those in search of privilege—and $4,000 extra a year.

Our junior member for Queens had indeed a good point here, which the Government would do well to bear in mind in future. Unfortunately, in this case, it committed itself to a course that gave noisy party disputants the leeway they were looking for, and created a squabble that nearly brought the whole session to a standstill.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Senate has now given third and final reading to the Government's bill increasing old age pensions by $10 a month to $75. Royal assent is likely to be given this week, making it possible to include the increase in the cheques to be mailed to nearly 1,000,000 pensioners later this month.

Improved health facilities now protect pilgrims to Mecca. Hospitals in the area have leaked water tubs for cases of heat stroke, and there are mobile health units, emergency pharmacies and even a modern ice factory at the foot of Mount Arafat. More than a million Moslem worshippers from 60 countries journeyed to Mecca this year, yet the pilgrimage has been free from quarantinable diseases.

It is encouraging to note that Canada has sold about 5,500,000 pounds of butter to the United Kingdom in the first major export sale of this kind since 1953. The consignment, to be delivered before Nov. 15, was priced well before the prevailing export level of about 32 cents a pound at Montreal docks. The butter is one or two years old and the sale was under keen competition with the United States, which is believed to have obtained rights to supply an equal amount at higher prices, with fresher butter involved.

WANT TO IMPROVE YOUR BUSINESS EFFICIENCY?

Visit the Office Equipment and Systems Exhibition at the Chottetown Hotel

Monday, Oct. 21 Tuesday, Oct. 22 Wednesday, Oct. 23

ACCOUNTING MACHINES CALCULATORS SYSTEMIZED CASH REGISTERS

Plus a host of other modern office machines and systems.

Sponsored by H. H. A. SPONSORS LIMITED

Charlotteville Summerside

RESERVE TIME NOW AND PLAN TO ATTEND THE SHOW.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

FRANK MYERS M.L.A. Grand, P.E.I.

GUESS WHOSE LAWN IT'LL SETTLE ON

INTERNATIONAL CLIMATE

Are We Moving Out Of The Ice Age?

Ottawa Journal

It would be just as wrong not to recognize the better international climate than to make too much of the changing atmosphere. There is nothing else on which there is a more general agreement than the fact that the East and West could agree. The answer to that has come quickly: the agreement in principle among the U.S., Russia and Britain to keep nuclear weapons off orbiting space vehicles.

FIRST MAJOR STEP

By itself that accord may not be a major contribution to East-West understanding. But it is no mere abstraction. It is the first major step taken towards bringing the rule of law to outer space. Man may yet leave his quarrels on earth and make space a zone of peace.

PUBLIC FORUM

This column is open to the discussion of any and all matters of public interest. The Guardian does not necessarily endorse the views of its contributors. All letters published are subject to editing and condensation where necessary. The Guardian does not accept any correspondence regarding this column.

JAIL CONDITIONS

See the report under "to the Governments, and I will say this on his behalf, he has never tried to influence the committee in any way or alter the report. Because of committee recommendations, the Queen's County Jail has improved in the last 2 or 3 years to such an extent that many are committing small offences to be sent there, where, to use the words of one of the prisoners, "are out of this world". The reason for this change was to eliminate the waste we found taking place.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Senate has now given third and final reading to the Government's bill increasing old age pensions by $10 a month to $75. Royal assent is likely to be given this week, making it possible to include the increase in the cheques to be mailed to nearly 1,000,000 pensioners later this month.

Improved health facilities now protect pilgrims to Mecca. Hospitals in the area have leaked water tubs for cases of heat stroke, and there are mobile health units, emergency pharmacies and even a modern ice factory at the foot of Mount Arafat. More than a million Moslem worshippers from 60 countries journeyed to Mecca this year, yet the pilgrimage has been free from quarantinable diseases.

It is encouraging to note that Canada has sold about 5,500,000 pounds of butter to the United Kingdom in the first major export sale of this kind since 1953. The consignment, to be delivered before Nov. 15, was priced well before the prevailing export level of about 32 cents a pound at Montreal docks.

The butter is one or two years old and the sale was under keen competition with the United States, which is believed to have obtained rights to supply an equal amount at higher prices, with fresher butter involved.

What is all this row about, and why has it stirred up so much anger at Washington? Ostensibly the reason is that we are selling wheat at an agreed-upon price—a policy that goes back for many years. The buyer undertakes to buy so much wheat over a period of time; the seller guarantees to sell the wheat at the price agreed upon. If, while the agreement is in force, the price goes up, the buyer is protected against the rise. If the price goes down, the seller is protected against the drop.

Apparently our recent agreement to sell 39 million bushels to Japan at a set price put the skids under U.S. plans to sell to Japan at a price higher than the Canadian price.

This is now it is interpreted by the Winnipeg Free Press, which speaks with authority on the subject. At the moment, because of poor harvests elsewhere in the world, the United States and Canada have, practically, a monopoly on wheat. The United States would like to have a wheat price "on-par" in setting a wheat price as high as the traffic will bear.

The U.S. suggested an increase of 15 cents a bushel, on the assumption that under the laws of supply and demand the world price would go up by this amount. Canada, however, refused to go along. The Canadian price has increased by eight cents a bushel in recent days—and could go up more.

But the wheat board wisely is looking past the present temporary shortage. It believes that our traditional customers should not be charged sky-high prices merely because there is, temporarily, a seller's market in wheat. It believes that future sales of Canadian wheat should be protected, even at the expense of a quick profit today.

There is also the danger that if the price of wheat were permitted to skyrocket, farmers might be induced to grow more wheat—what might tomorrow we might have difficulty selling.

Without these "usual channels" Parliament would be bogged down with trivia. Intra-party feuds are not the business of Parliament but the "usual channels" of amicable discussion behind the scenes are neglected by those in search of privilege—and $4,000 extra a year.

Our junior member for Queens had indeed a good point here, which the Government would do well to bear in mind in future. Unfortunately, in this case, it committed itself to a course that gave noisy party disputants the leeway they were looking for, and created a squabble that nearly brought the whole session to a standstill.

Improved health facilities now protect pilgrims to Mecca. Hospitals in the area have leaked water tubs for cases of heat stroke, and there are mobile health units, emergency pharmacies and even a modern ice factory at the foot of Mount Arafat. More than a million Moslem worshippers from 60 countries journeyed to Mecca this year, yet the pilgrimage has been free from quarantinable diseases.

It is encouraging to note that Canada has sold about 5,500,000 pounds of butter to the United Kingdom in the first major export sale of this kind since 1953. The consignment, to be delivered before Nov. 15, was priced well before the prevailing export level of about 32 cents a pound at Montreal docks.

The butter is one or two years old and the sale was under keen competition with the United States, which is believed to have obtained rights to supply an equal amount at higher prices, with fresher butter involved.

Three-In-One Oral Vaccine

By Dr. Theodore R. VanDellen

Another milestone was passed with the announcement that the live oral poliovirus vaccine now contains protection against all three strains. Two doses are required, eight weeks apart, and immunity reaches its peak in two or three months.

This is in contrast to the older vaccine, which required three doses at a 12-week interval. One dose contained Type 1, the next Type 2, and the last Type 3. Immunity developed about 10 to 15 months.

The new vaccine is administered in a teaspoon or a paper cup. It may be mixed with sirup or milk, or dropped on a lump of sugar or a piece of bread or cake. At present, manufacturers are recommending a booster dose after two or three years. Most of the users will be children but the product is not restricted to children under 6 weeks of age.

The main advantage of the three-in-one oral vaccine is that there is no need to keep track of the separate types of vaccines given each child. The problem when millions are immunized over a short span of time. If anything, the savings in book-keeping and other administrative costs will make the simpler methods worth retaining.

Polio vaccines are paying dividends. There were 3,400 cases starting in the United States in 1952. The number dropped to 481 during the same period in 1951, and to 107 in 1950. The figures show that the disease is being carried on during the winter and spring months.

WELCOME CHANGE

It would be just as wrong not to recognize the better international climate than to make too much of the changing atmosphere. There is nothing else on which there is a more general agreement than the fact that the East and West could agree. The answer to that has come quickly: the agreement in principle among the U.S., Russia and Britain to keep nuclear weapons off orbiting space vehicles.

FIRST MAJOR STEP

By itself that accord may not be a major contribution to East-West understanding. But it is no mere abstraction. It is the first major step taken towards bringing the rule of law to outer space. Man may yet leave his quarrels on earth and make space a zone of peace.

PUBLIC FORUM

This column is open to the discussion of any and all matters of public interest. The Guardian does not necessarily endorse the views of its contributors. All letters published are subject to editing and condensation where necessary. The Guardian does not accept any correspondence regarding this column.

JAIL CONDITIONS

See the report under "to the Governments, and I will say this on his behalf, he has never tried to influence the committee in any way or alter the report. Because of committee recommendations, the Queen's County Jail has improved in the last 2 or 3 years to such an extent that many are committing small offences to be sent there, where, to use the words of one of the prisoners, "are out of this world".

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Senate has now given third and final reading to the Government's bill increasing old age pensions by $10 a month to $75. Royal assent is likely to be given this week, making it possible to include the increase in the cheques to be mailed to nearly 1,000,000 pensioners later this month.

Improved health facilities now protect pilgrims to Mecca. Hospitals in the area have leaked water tubs for cases of heat stroke, and there are mobile health units, emergency pharmacies and even a modern ice factory at the foot of Mount Arafat. More than a million Moslem worshippers from 60 countries journeyed to Mecca this year, yet the pilgrimage has been free from quarantinable diseases.

It is encouraging to note that Canada has sold about 5,500,000 pounds of butter to the United Kingdom in the first major export sale of this kind since 1953. The consignment, to be delivered before Nov. 15, was priced well before the prevailing export level of about 32 cents a pound at Montreal docks.

The butter is one or two years old and the sale was under keen competition with the United States, which is believed to have obtained rights to supply an equal amount at higher prices, with fresher butter involved.

What is all this row about, and why has it stirred up so much anger at Washington? Ostensibly the reason is that we are selling wheat at an agreed-upon price—a policy that goes back for many years. The buyer undertakes to buy so much wheat over a period of time; the seller guarantees to sell the wheat at the price agreed upon.

If, while the agreement is in force, the price goes up, the buyer is protected against the rise. If the price goes down, the seller is protected against the drop. Apparently our recent agreement to sell 39 million bushels to Japan at a set price put the skids under U.S. plans to sell to Japan at a price higher than the Canadian price.

This is now it is interpreted by the Winnipeg Free Press, which speaks with authority on the subject. At the moment, because of poor harvests elsewhere in the world, the United States and Canada have, practically, a monopoly on wheat. The United States would like to have a wheat price "on-par" in setting a wheat price as high as the traffic will bear.

The U.S. suggested an increase of 15 cents a bushel, on the assumption that under the laws of supply and demand the world price would go up by this amount. Canada, however, refused to go along. The Canadian price has increased by eight cents a bushel in recent days—and could go up more.

But the wheat board wisely is looking past the present temporary shortage. It believes that our traditional customers should not be charged sky-high prices merely because there is, temporarily, a seller's market in wheat. It believes that future sales of Canadian wheat should be protected, even at the expense of a quick profit today.

There is also the danger that if the price of wheat were permitted to skyrocket, farmers might be induced to grow more wheat—what might tomorrow we might have difficulty selling.

Without these "usual channels" Parliament would be bogged down with trivia. Intra-party feuds are not the business of Parliament but the "usual channels" of amicable discussion behind the scenes are neglected by those in search of privilege—and $4,000 extra a year.

Our junior member for Queens had indeed a good point here, which the Government would do well to bear in mind in future. Unfortunately, in this case, it committed itself to a course that gave noisy party disputants the leeway they were looking for, and created a squabble that nearly brought the whole session to a standstill.

Improved health facilities now protect pilgrims to Mecca. Hospitals in the area have leaked water tubs for cases of heat stroke, and there are mobile health units, emergency pharmacies and even a modern ice factory at the foot of Mount Arafat. More than a million Moslem worshippers from 60 countries journeyed to Mecca this year, yet the pilgrimage has been free from quarantinable diseases.

It is encouraging to note that Canada has sold about 5,500,000 pounds of butter to the United Kingdom in the first major export sale of this kind since 1953. The consignment, to be delivered before Nov. 15, was priced well before the prevailing export level of about 32 cents a pound at Montreal docks.

The butter is one or two years old and the sale was under keen competition with the United States, which is believed to have obtained rights to supply an equal amount at higher prices, with fresher butter involved.

What is all this row about, and why has it stirred up so much anger at Washington? Ostensibly the reason is that we are selling wheat at an agreed-upon price—a policy that goes back for many years. The buyer undertakes to buy so much wheat over a period of time; the seller guarantees to sell the wheat at the price agreed upon.

If, while the agreement is in force, the price goes up, the buyer is protected against the rise. If the price goes down, the seller is protected against the drop. Apparently our recent agreement to sell 39 million bushels to Japan at a set price put the skids under U.S. plans to sell to Japan at a price higher than the Canadian price.

This is now it is interpreted by the Winnipeg Free Press, which speaks with authority on the subject. At the moment, because of poor harvests elsewhere in the world, the United States and Canada have, practically, a monopoly on wheat. The United States would like to have a wheat price "on-par" in setting a wheat price as high as the traffic will bear.

The U.S. suggested an increase of 15 cents a bushel, on the assumption that under the laws of supply and demand the world price would go up by this amount. Canada, however, refused to go along. The Canadian price has increased by eight cents a bushel in recent days—and could go up more.

But the wheat board wisely is looking past the present temporary shortage. It believes that our traditional customers should not be charged sky-high prices merely because there is, temporarily, a seller's market in wheat. It believes that future sales of Canadian wheat should be protected, even at the expense of a quick profit today.

There is also the danger that if the price of wheat were permitted to skyrocket, farmers might be induced to grow more wheat—what might tomorrow we might have difficulty selling.

Without these "usual channels" Parliament would be bogged down with trivia. Intra-party feuds are not the business of Parliament but the "usual channels" of amicable discussion behind the scenes are neglected by those in search of privilege—and $4,000 extra a year.

Our junior member for Queens had indeed a good point here, which the Government would do well to bear in mind in future. Unfortunately, in this case, it committed itself to a course that gave noisy party disputants the leeway they were looking for, and created a squabble that nearly brought the whole session to a standstill.

Improved health facilities now protect pilgrims to Mecca. Hospitals in the area have leaked water tubs for cases of heat stroke, and there are mobile health units, emergency pharmacies and even a modern ice factory at the foot of Mount Arafat. More than a million Moslem worshippers from 60 countries journeyed to Mecca this year, yet the pilgrimage has been free from quarantinable diseases.

It is encouraging to note that Canada has sold about 5,500,000 pounds of butter to the United Kingdom in the first major export sale of this kind since 1953. The consignment, to be delivered before Nov. 15, was priced well before the prevailing export level of about 32 cents a pound at Montreal docks.

The butter is one or two years old and the sale was under keen competition with the United States, which is believed to have obtained rights to supply an equal amount at higher prices, with fresher butter involved.

What is all this row about, and why has it stirred up so much anger at Washington? Ostensibly the reason is that we are selling wheat at an agreed-upon price—a policy that goes back for many years. The buyer undertakes to buy so much wheat over a period of time; the seller guarantees to sell the wheat at the price agreed upon.

If, while the agreement is in force, the price goes up, the buyer is protected against the rise. If the price goes down, the seller is protected against the drop. Apparently our recent agreement to sell 39 million bushels to Japan at a set price put the skids under U.S. plans to sell to Japan at a price higher than the Canadian price.

This is now it is interpreted by the Winnipeg Free Press, which speaks with authority on the subject. At the moment, because of poor harvests elsewhere in the world, the United States and Canada have, practically, a monopoly on wheat. The United States would like to have a wheat price "on-par" in setting a wheat price as high as the traffic will bear.

The U.S. suggested an increase of 15 cents a bushel, on the assumption that under the laws of supply and demand the world price would go up by this amount. Canada, however, refused to go along. The Canadian price has increased by eight cents a bushel in recent days—and could go up more.

But the wheat board wisely is looking past the present temporary shortage. It believes that our traditional customers should not be charged sky-high prices merely because there is, temporarily, a seller's market in wheat. It believes that future sales of Canadian wheat should be protected, even at the expense of a quick profit today.

There is also the danger that if the price of wheat were permitted to skyrocket, farmers might be induced to grow more wheat—what might tomorrow we might have difficulty selling.

Without these "usual channels" Parliament would be bogged down with trivia. Intra-party feuds are not the business of Parliament but the "usual channels" of amicable discussion behind the scenes are neglected by those in search of privilege—and $4,000 extra a year.

Our junior member for Queens had indeed a good point here, which the Government would do well to bear in mind in future. Unfortunately, in this case, it committed itself to a course that gave noisy party disputants the leeway they were looking for, and created a squabble that nearly brought the whole session to a standstill.

Improved health facilities now protect pilgrims to Mecca. Hospitals in the area have leaked water tubs for cases of heat stroke, and there are mobile health units, emergency pharmacies and even a modern ice factory at the foot of Mount Arafat. More than a million Moslem worshippers from 60 countries journeyed to Mecca this year, yet the pilgrimage has been free from quarantinable diseases.

It is encouraging to note that Canada has sold about 5,500,000 pounds of butter to the United Kingdom in the first major export sale of this kind since 1953. The consignment, to be delivered before Nov. 15, was priced well before the prevailing export level of about 32 cents a pound at Montreal docks.

The butter is one or two years old and the sale was under keen competition with the United States, which is believed to have obtained rights to supply an equal amount at higher prices, with fresher butter involved.

What is all this row about, and why has it stirred up so much anger at Washington? Ostensibly the reason is that we are selling wheat at an agreed-upon price—a policy that goes back for many years. The buyer undertakes to buy so much wheat over a period of time; the seller guarantees to sell the wheat at the price agreed upon.

If, while the agreement is in force, the price goes up, the buyer is protected against the rise. If the price goes down, the seller is protected against the drop. Apparently our recent agreement to sell 39 million bushels to Japan at a set price put the skids under U.S. plans to sell to Japan at a price higher than the Canadian price.

This is now it is interpreted by the Winnipeg Free Press, which speaks with authority on the subject. At the moment, because of poor harvests elsewhere in the world, the United States and Canada have, practically, a monopoly on wheat. The United States would like to have a wheat price "on-par" in setting a wheat price as high as the traffic will bear.

The U.S. suggested an increase of 15 cents a bushel, on the assumption that under the laws of supply and demand the world price would go up by this amount. Canada, however, refused to go along. The Canadian price has increased by eight cents a bushel in recent days—and could go up more.

But the wheat board wisely is looking past the present temporary shortage. It believes that our traditional customers should not be charged sky-high prices merely because there is, temporarily, a seller's market in wheat. It believes that future sales of Canadian wheat should be protected, even at the expense of a quick profit today.

There is also the danger that if the price of wheat were permitted to skyrocket, farmers might be induced to grow more wheat—what might tomorrow we might have difficulty selling.

Without these "usual channels" Parliament would be bogged down with trivia. Intra-party feuds are not the business of Parliament but the "usual channels" of amicable discussion behind the scenes are neglected by those in search of privilege—and $4,000 extra a year.

Our junior member for Queens had indeed a good point here, which the Government would do well to bear in mind in future. Unfortunately, in this case, it committed itself to a course that gave noisy party disputants the leeway they were looking for, and created a squabble that nearly brought the whole session to a standstill.

Improved health facilities now protect pilgrims to Mecca. Hospitals in the area have leaked water tubs for cases of heat stroke, and there are mobile health units, emergency pharmacies and even a modern ice factory at the foot of Mount Arafat. More than a million Moslem worshippers from 60 countries journeyed to Mecca this year, yet the pilgrimage has been free from quarantinable diseases.

It is encouraging to note that Canada has sold about 5,500,000 pounds of butter to the United Kingdom in the first major export sale of this kind since 1953. The consignment, to be delivered before Nov. 15, was priced well before the prevailing export level of about 32 cents a pound at Montreal docks.

The butter is one or two years old and the sale was under keen competition with the United States, which is believed to have obtained rights to supply an equal amount at higher prices, with fresher butter involved.