

Old Lank Bombers Had Grand Wartime Record

By DAVE McINTOSH
 Canadian Press Staff Writer
 OTTAWA (CP) — The RCAF is down to its last 30 Lancasters, but at least some of these are likely to be around for a few years yet.

To thousands of Canadian war-time airmen, the passing of the Lancaster is the death of an ancient and the demolition of a landmark. They were the favorite RAF bomber command's mortal blows at Germany. Some of the Lancs recently retired from the RCAF are being cannibalized — they are being broken down for spare parts to be used for other Lancs still in service.

The two Maritime reconnaissance squadrons at Greenwood, N. S., have recently converted from Lancasters to U.S.-built patrol bombers and the coastal patrol squadron at Comox, B. C., is expected to do the same. That will still leave some Lancs on search and rescue and photography work for the next two or three years.

Sympathy is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Linkletter of Summerside on the death of their infant son. Mrs. Linkletter is the former Estelle Williams of Miscouche.

SCAVENGER HUNT

Because production of Lancasters ceased in 1945, spare parts are hard to come by. That's why those being retired form the focal point for a scavenger hunt.
