

The Polio Season For P. E. I. Is Mid-August to Mid-October

Mid-August to mid-October is usually the worst season for polio in P. E. I., although cases may occur much earlier or later. So far, there have been very few cases this year.

The viruses which cause polio usually enter the body by way of the mouth through contact with infectious discharges from nose, mouth and bowels.

Even before symptoms of polio appear, the viruses multiply chiefly in the intestinal tract and are also found in the sputum and discharges from the nose.

KEEP CLEAN
Strict cleanliness is essential in preventing polio. Hands should be washed frequently and always before eating and handling food and after going to the toilet.

OTHER PROTECTIVE MEASURES
1. Avoid going places where polio cases have been reported in large numbers. Avoid contacts in buses, trains and crowds. Keep children with their own friends.

IF SYMPTOMS DEVELOP
Go to bed. This is important. Call the doctor.

Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan

EFFICIENCY COMES THROUGH DIGNITY

It is always a matter of interest to observe the varying meanings which have been given to one word or phrase over a long period of time.

One has only to think of the attitudes of people in the past towards such terms as democracy, liberty and authority to recognize the extent to which the modern interpretation of these words has altered.

OWEN'S EXPERIMENT
This in itself is not surprising; our ideas reflect the changing effect of that change.

To illustrate let us take a word which is very well known to all of us in this century: socialism. There was a time when one who called himself a socialist had as his purpose in life to make the working life to be more tolerable. One has only to read about the efforts of the early socialists, Robert Owen, for instance, to see this aim borne out in practice.

AUGUSTINE COVE W. I.
The regular monthly meeting of Augustine Cove W. I. met Thursday evening August 4, at the home of Mrs. Kenneth Dawson. In the absence of the President, the Vice-President took charge.

THE NEW SOCIALISM
The meaning of socialism has changed somewhat since those early, idyllic days. The desire to raise living conditions among the masses remains very real for the means offered; it is the methods of modern socialism which have led our thinking astray with regard to the meaning of the word socialism.

Wealth Brings Unusual Problems To Saudi Arabia

By Ronald MacLurks
JEDDAH Saudi Arabia, (Reuters)—Wealth and a desire for progress are bringing some unusual problems to this Arab kingdom on the Red sea.

One of the main dilemmas for Saudi Arabians is how to find a place in the modern world without sacrificing dignity, traditions and religious scruples.

Recently, for instance, King Saud, the stately, scholarly ruler of the country, and his advisers were worried. A big party for the king and all the notables of the land had been arranged to take place on board the oil tanker Al-Malik Saud at Awal on the eve of its first voyage under the Saudi Arabian flag.

ANTIDOTE TO BOREDOM
It is a peculiar feature of our modern civilization that we try to avoid the issue whenever we can. For example, in the case of industry, the working man is provided with a suitable amount of leisure time in which he may relax and prepare for coming of his day's work.

Everyone feels that enough leisure time will surely provide the antidote for the ailment of the mechanistic age, boredom.

Simultaneously everyone is well aware, from his own personal experience, that too much leisure, too much relaxation, is just as demoralizing in its effects as too little.

Later on William Morris and many others reaffirmed Owen's view that the primary purpose of socialism was not to produce the greatest possible amount of goods but rather to improve the lives of the people.

Now the socialist shares a common theme with his arch-enemy, the capitalist. There is a difference of course, the socialist is still concerned with the profit of the community as a whole while the first duty of the capitalist is to his shareholders.

PRINCIPLES OF THE BAHAI WORLD FAITH
THE ONENESS OF RELIGION
No religion has an exclusive claim to Truth, for God has spoken to man more than once. And the Baha'i Faith is no exception to this. It recognizes the divine origin of the great religions, and believes its own Scripture to be the modern chapter of this eternal Book, to be followed by others later in his unfolding mankind from seeing the Divine unity of all Religions. For this Day, the Baha'i World Faith is the meeting place for them all.
You are invited to write for free literature without obligation to Charlottetown Baha'i Community, Box 492 care of Guardian, Charlottetown.
