

PM Denies That Canada Will Launch Satellite

TORONTO (CP)—A report that Canada plans to launch an earth satellite this year was denied Tuesday by Prime Minister Diefenbaker.

The Toronto Star said in a copyrighted story that the launching is planned in the fall from Churchill, Man., using a two-pound sphere being made at Valcartier, Que.

The prime minister said in Ottawa after a cabinet meeting the report has "no foundation."

"There is no scintilla of evidence to support that statement," UNIMPEACHABLE SOURCE

The newspaper story was attributed to "an unimpeachable source" who asked not to be identified. It predicted that the plans would be denied by all official sources.

The Star said the satellite would be a radio-equipped plastic sphere six inches in diameter and would be put into a north-south orbit by combining an oxygen-hydrogen gun, now being built at Valcartier, with an American-built Redstone ballistic missile.

It said the method of putting the sphere into orbit was devised under the direction of Dr. Gerry V. Bull, 30, head of the aerophysics wing of the Canadian Armament and Research Development Establishment at Valcartier.

Dr. Bull said the establishment is not working on any satellite project and has not suggested any to the federal government.

POWERFUL COMBINATION

He said work on defence against intercontinental ballistic missiles led to the development of a "gun" which if combined with a rocket could theoretically launch a satellite.

"But to say we are planning to launch one is wrong," he said. "We have talked about this idea among ourselves here. But it has never been more than a bright idea."

Brig. Donald Waldock, CARDE's chief superintendent, called the report "sheer fantasy."

He said last Thursday that Canadian scientists have the technical knowledge to launch satellites. Such an operation, however, would require more funds and manpower than are available to the Defence Research Board.

ONLY THEORIES

Dr. G. S. Field, chief scientist of the board, said talks with scientists about launching a satellite have been only theoretical.

The Star said later satellites may have Canadian-made first-stage rockets and may eventually use second- and third-stage rockets instead of or in addition to the oxygen-hydrogen device.

The story said many of the scientists now working on the satellite participated in firing two-stage, delta-winged rockets from Picton, Ont., between 1952 and 1954. It added their program was curtailed because of a shortage of trained personnel.

S' Side And Ch'town Plan Contest For Blood Donors

Mayor Currie, of Summerside has proposed a competition in which the two urban centers of Charlottetown and Summerside, would compete to see which would, on a percentage of population, produce the highest percentage of blood donors.

Mayor Edwin C. Johnstone of the City said in reply, "This City accepts the challenge and we will do everything in our power to win." Mayor Johnstone also stated, "We fully realize the great importance of this phase of Red Cross work and will accept a challenge from anyone."

In issuing the challenge Mayor Currie appreciatively noted the organization in both centers that precedes these blood donor clinics, and pointed out that despite excellent arrangements and facilities, the problem of obtaining the quota of donors was sometimes a concern to the Red Cross Society who maintain and supply a free blood transfusion service that has saved the lives of hundreds of Canadians that would have died except for the life-giving donations made by public-spirited citizens who attend the clinics.

Mayor Currie, himself a blood donor on many occasions, is an honorary officer of the P. E. I. Red Cross Society and a past president of the Summerside Branch of the Red Cross, where he has served voluntarily for more than twenty years.
