Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur
When the Old Tavern at the top of Bell's Hill was doing business, a group of farmers on a certain night were hitting it up, finally, a heated discussion arose on some point of doctrine and their voices were ringing the rafters.
A Shepherd dog lay in front of the bar, his master sitting quietly by. The animal, desirous of having his say in the discussion, rose on his hind legs and gave out a mournful howl. Suddenly his owner sprang to his feet and applied the toe of his boot to Eric's ribs at the same time saying, "Be quiet you fool and lie down for you are an ignorant of the subject as the rest of 'em."
It usually takes six months to make a piano, and the wood used for the sounding board and some of the parts is seasoned in the open air from four to five years. The piano that the famous Wagner played upon was discovered in Berlin, Germany, by an American soldier while serving in World War I. By the way, the original name of this instrument was pianoforte.

Many men have failed in one pursuit and succeeded in another. Poet Cooper was a poor lawyer, but he became renowned as a poet. Goldsmith was a medico without renown, but his literary productions had grace and beauty. Joseph Addison could not address an audience, but he was a writer of great charm.
A man in a closet, and the bust of a young woman on the living room table. When he shuffled off this mortal coil in 1909 he left orders that his own body be buried unembalmed.
Henry Wilson, a former Vice-President of the U. S. A., was "bound out" to a farmer in New Hampshire at the age of ten years. After he was free he worked on a farm at $6.00 per month. Then he hiked one hundred miles to Natick, Mass., to become a cobbler. Eight years later he became a member of the legislature. Another 20 years saw him a member of the U. S. Senate. His achievements there won him the second office within the gift of the American people.

The man who fooled the scientists: Name: Pierre Lutece, a French vaudeville actor who was supposed to be able to answer any questions on any subject. Naturally the fellows became interested in the fellow and contracted his brain after death which took place in Paris in 1935. Only then did they learn that Pierre had collected $50,000 for the exclusive possession of his brain from 53 different organizations. That was a unique swindle. It was not in England, Magna Charta was secured by a group of men who couldn't write their names. They signed the deed with their marks, which the writer assumes were X's.

Self-made men govern the world now as they ever have governed it. You don't believe my statement, eh? Well, records show that the majority of the leaders of humanity, in art, science, legislation and government, are not college graduates, but men who have worked their way up from obscurity and poverty, through trials and tribulations, by their own efforts. A careful study of history will establish the truthfulness of this remark.
Among Canadians, a popular fallacy, as old and persistent as it is absurd is that if the ground hog sees his shadow on Feb. 2, there's sure to be a second winter.
The hamster is a unique little animal that scientists have been studying since 1930. The rat-sized rodents are now known to be excellent aids in the diagnosis and investigation of a number of diseases. The females breed at 43 days of age and give birth to their young 16 days later. Robert March of Mobile, Alabama, makes these little animals pay off at the rate of $100,000 a year. The first complete treatise on breeding hamsters was published in the 16th century by Caesar Fiaschl. In the 18th century veterinary schools were established in France.
It is a well known fact that every dog can follow unerringly the footsteps of his master. Bloodhounds are able to follow the track of a criminal and pick him out from hundreds of others who may have passed over the same ground.

RETREAT HELD FOR NOTRE DAME STUDENTS—Last week-end ninety-five college students followed the exercises of the annual retreat which is held each year at Notre Dame Academy. This year the retreat was under the direction of Reverend Eric Robin, F.F., Stella Maris. The retreat began on Friday evening at 6 o'clock and closed at the same hour on Sunday. During that time the girls were privileged to hear conferences on many topics which concerned their spiritual and social obligations. Father Robin, a zealous and understanding director of youth, gave generously of every moment of his time. That it was a success is evident by the enthusiastic remarks heard on all sides. "Our retreat was one I shall never forget." "The only fault I found with it was it was too short." "Life has more meaning and Heaven, too," etc. A beautiful Holy Hour was the fitting close to this deeply spiritual program of prayer and reflection.

The WEEK at S. D. U.

"The key to the understanding of G. K. Chesterton is contained in his claim that all philosophy is applied with fun and all fun with philosophy." Those few words which contain one of Chesterton's most cherished attitudes, we may safely write, express pretty well the theme of the special address given by Professor Brendan O'Grady, head of the English department at St. Dunstan's, at the annual Philosophers' Day Banquet held Wednesday, March 7th, the feast of St. Thomas Aquinas.
If it is a coincidence that those few words also express the theme for the whole of that great day, it is, indeed, a remarkable one. For it is true that from seven o'clock in the morning until twelve o'clock that night it was a day in which philosophy was mixed with fun and fun with philosophy.

It is, however, no coincidence that those same words express the theme of the "Week". Indeed, it could not be otherwise, because much of the column must be devoted to Philosophers' Day.

Philosophers' Day, just so we shall have everything straight, is a day annually set aside for the celebration of the feast of the greatest of all Christian philosophers, St. Thomas Aquinas. Only those students who study philosophy participate in the day's ceremonies.

This year's activities were much the same as previous ones, but many believe that they were more exciting. The celebration of High Mass in the morning by Rev. J. A. Sullivan, Professor of Philosophy, was the perfect beginning of a wonderful day.

After the important accident of breakfast, the next features took place on the ice in the College rink where two hard-scating and determined hockey teams from the junior class trounced the seniors in both ends of the annual Philosophers' Day double-header. In the first game, the first team juniors skated and scored their way to a terrific 4-1 upset victory over the favoured seniors. The second game saw the junior second team down the second string seniors 4-2. The star of the first game was Mark "Puss" Potency. MacQuaid who scored three goals for the juniors. Outstanding in the second contest was the junior goaler, "SubSTANtial" Mooney.

We hope, by the time this appears in print, that two of our fellow students, J. D. McCarville and David Kennedy, both members of the junior class, have recovered from the illnesses which forced them to the hospital this week. Their fellow students all sincerely hope that both J. D. and Dave will be up around again in time to write the mid-term examinations.

May we conclude by extending the sympathy of the students to Elmer "What-If-I-do-Ips" MacPhee, who was the only serious casualty of the Philosophers' Day hockey matches. "Skinny" suffered a severely gashed lip which required stitches to close, and which, it is generally agreed, greatly handicapped him at the skate Wednesday evening.

During the week, there was a great deal of athletic activity. Taking precedence, perhaps, were the playoffs for the College Intramural hockey championship. Victorious in the semi-finals were Grades X and XI who beat out the Freshmen, and the Sophomores who eliminated the juniors. The first game of the finals between Grades X and XI and the Sophomores is scheduled to open Sunday afternoon.

This week, the senior hockey team marked up its most impressive victory of the season when it trimmed the O'Leary Maroons 17-6 in the O'Leary rink last Saturday evening. Guy Chretien and Cliff Bernard with four goals each led the Saints to victory.

Two basketball victories consolidated the senior Saints' hold on first place in the Island League. The Red and White rolled a 103-62 score over the Y. M. C. A. last Saturday. On Wednesday evening, the same Saints trounced the R. C. A. F. 87-63, to really prove that those high-scoring games are the result of genuine ability.

On Thursday evening, the annual retreat opened. The retreat master this year is Rev. Father MacLellan, Rector of Holy Redeemer Parish in Charlottetown. The retreat, which is one of the high points of the College year, will close with Holy Hour on Sunday afternoon.

The most important single event of the day—although, after the athletic successes of the morning, it is not easy for the juniors to see it so—was the Banquet, which began about one o'clock in the Charlottetown Hotel. And the most important single feature of the banquet was the special address given by Mr. O'Grady. As you might have already imagined, the address was devoted mainly to a brief consideration of the career of G. K. Chesterton, one of the truly great figures in the history of English literature.

The outline of Chesterton's career was discussed by Mr. O'Grady under four aspects of the "Angelic Jester's" genius; his ability as a sketcher, a debater, a lecturer, and a writer. The manner in which these aspects of Chesterton's life were presented showed the great man he truly was.

The great day concluded with a special attraction, the first annual Philosophers' Day skate. The skate was attended by the coeds and by many young ladies from Charlottetown, as well as by many members of the philosophy classes at the College. The skate, probably the most enjoyable of the entire year, was arranged, by George Keefe, chairman of the Philosophers' Day committee, which committee, incidentally, was largely responsible for the success of the celebration in honour of St. Thomas.

Lenten Meditations

LIFE AS CHOICE
(The London Times)
The special quality of the Prayer Book collects is their success in compressing profound and universal needs into short and pregnant petitions, the perfect form of which stands out more clearly by their economy of language. The collect for the Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity is no exception.
"Grant thy people grace," it prays, "to withstand the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil, and with pure hearts and minds to follow thee the only God." The lapidary Latin which lies behind this prayer has passed into the vigorous Tudor English of the sixteenth century, and gathered a little more roundness of rhythm in the seventeenth. In its final form it expresses a view of life as a momentous choice between powerful but deceptive attractions on the one hand, and a fully satisfying, all-absorbing quest of the divine will on the other.

The familiarly in English ears of this phrase, "the world, the flesh, and the devil," comes undoubtedly from its use in one of the clauses of the Litany, and this is the earliest use of the phrase in English services. It had no parallel in the Latin original of the Litany, and seems to be a special formula of the English Prayer Book.
These three evil powers may be thought to represent inescapable elements of the environment in which life is set. All may easily allow man from his true goal, to follow lesser and finally disastrous ends.
"The world" stands for organized society in so far as it ignores or disobeys God. "The flesh" means the physical side of human nature, when its imperious demands are found, as they often are, to "war against the soul." "The devil" really means "the enduring power, which makes for evil, and wickedness," to distort and reverse Matthew Arnold's famous definition of God.

These are the allurements which, today as always, beset man on his way. Siren-like they lure him off his true course, disguising their perils by means of their varied and seductive appeal. As Ulysses tied himself to his ship's mast to avoid the all but irresistible magnetism of the Sirens, the Christian throws himself wholly on the grace of God for assistance in his daily struggle against this deadly trio of evil forces.

But the truly Christian prayer does not stop at the negative request for victory over temptation. It moves on to the positive side, which is the only real answer to the problem of temptation. Man is made to follow, that is, to seek for God. This can be done successfully only by "the pure in heart," which in this context does not mean the untroubled and unstained, but those who follow the quest with single minds.

Bahai Teaching On Child Care

Specialists in child care today do not give us many hard and fixed rules for bringing up children. They have learned that individual variations in parents, children and family situations are too great to permit the formulating of many rules of thumb for specific situations. Rather they seek to show parents and educators that it is the way in which a thing is taught, the spirit back of the teaching, which registers most with the child. Basically the only way to teach children character is by the example of our own lives. They respond to our attitudes, our beliefs which are shown by our daily (often unconscious) actions. Insofar as we make of our beliefs a set of creeds and rituals to which we give lip service alone, just this will get across to our children. Insofar as we believe in a living God, who teaches through His Prophets, our children will grasp and reflect this.

The importance of religious faith and positive moral conviction for laying a foundation for the healthy development of children is recognized by many psychologists, psychiatrists, and educators today. (Quoting Anna Wolf from "Parents' Manual".) "Children do not need parents who cutfully send them to church, or methodically instruct them in their duty; they need parents who themselves hold strong and passionate moral convictions. . . . The important thing is that children should grow up with parents who believe that there are some ways of life which for us today are better than others and that these ways are worth defending with every ounce of our strength." (1)

"A child's spiritual education begins as soon as he becomes aware that his parents feel intensely concerning these distinctions" (2) (Distinction between good and bad ways of living).

"Parents need to be free and alive enough themselves so that they can do things actively with their children. . . . have good times. . . . work and play, without dependence. If the way is clear for these things and if parents are able at the same time to confront their sons and daughters with their own mature standards in living, children will learn, not all at once, perhaps, but gradually as they develop, and with many backslidings. Sound and responsible character in children does not come because they have been caught young and trained that way, but because they have been enabled of their own free will to give up their early egoistic and primitive wishes through affectionate contacts with parents who themselves love and practice civilized living." LIKES HAPPY MEDIUM wonderful they are nor how they adore them. Hence these tears and also hence these divorces.

HALIFAX—(CP)—Capt. J. Civalenski of the Polish liner Batary said here neither New York nor Halifax is exactly what he likes in seaports. "Take the busy entertainment of New York and mix it half-and-half with Halifax quiet hospitality—that would be just about perfect," he told reporters.

There are millions of women who might be happy who are miserable because they won't even try to like what they have. They won't realize that a husband can say it with beefsteaks just as truly as he can with orchids, and that a charge account at the best stores is more solid comfort than having poetry quoted to you. In a word, they won't try to get any happiness out of a commonplace marriage, though they would find it in peace and plenty and stability if they would only make the most of what it offered them.

And so it goes through life. None of us get just what we want, but we can all have what we like if we like what we have.
