Importance Of British Poultry Market Stressed

(Summerside Pioneer)

Great possibilities for the poultry industry in Prince Edward Island—an industry already staging a remarkable come-back—are seen by poultry shippers in this province. Present indications are that the British market during the next few years will absorb a very large quantity of Canadian poultry. They state, and there is a splendid field open in the early broiler trade. Essential, however, to any large development of the industry, according to shippers, is an educational campaign in the raising and finishing of poultry for the market, an art in which local poultry farmers are lacking, they say.

"There are two remarkable outlets for our poultry in the next few years," said one prominent shipper, speaking to the Pioneer Thursday. "These are the British market and the early broiler trade in the Maritimes."

For many years the unofficial title "the best man on the Island" has been claimed on behalf of many rough and ready battlers. In less disciplined days attempts were made to prove the right to the title at picnics, horse races and other public functions. These bouts were never supervised and were usually stopped before much damage was done to either of the contestants. But the present tournament will be conducted under the renowned Marquis of Queensbury rules with a competent referee, Jack Ahern, in the ring, and no favors will be handed out to anyone.

There seems every probability then that for the first time in the history of the Island one section of the country in either Prince, Kings or Queens counties will be weighing about 4 or 5 pounds, properly finished. Apart from this fact that our local growers do not seem to understand how to finish a bird properly, we are making a mistake in concentrating on bar-necked, because fattened and finished in the manner in which the British want them, such birds would weigh 7 or 8 pounds—too heavy for their demands.

Parasite Disease

"British poultry is being almost completely wiped out by a parasite disease, and poultry raisers in that country are utterly unable to meet the demand in their markets. To show just how bad the poultry epidemic is, I have personal knowledge of one man who had tens of thousands of pounds invested in chicken ranches, all of which are almost completely wiped out."

"It will take at least five years before the British poultry growers can do anything toward meeting their own demand. During that time, we can establish ourselves well in the Old Country markets, if we proceed in the right way."

"British buyers want a fat bird, Nova Scotia also refused co-operation of the French and English in making Canada a better country. "When we consider the bitter conflicts of years gone by here, we must realize that this country was worth fighting for, and I can assure you that it is worth having."

Mr. Comeau, minister without portfolio for Nova Scotia, paid tribute to pioneers of the province as he said, "Their hardships and sacrifices must have been many, and it is with a great deal of pride that I today join in the ceremony which marks the opening of this fine new building on the site of Fort Beauséjour."

Senator Bouquie spoke in French, while the brief addresses of Mr. Comeau and Dr. LaPalme were given in both languages.

"I think this old fort will be a prominent spot for visitors from the United States," commented consul-general Watson. He expressed an opinion there was no site on the North American continent of greater interest than Beauséjour.

The ceremony marked completion of several years work to establish Fort Beauséjour as a national park with a suitable museum, said Dr. Webster in his opening remarks. He thanked all those who had a part in the project. Hon. E. N. Rhodes, former minister of finance, had been one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the park. "I was never turned down once when I was soliciting exhibits, and I think that is quite a record," said Dr. Webster. "In fact we have many exhibits stored away, new cases are being made, and I feel that within a reasonably short time we will have to make application to the government to build an addition to the building which is being officially opened today."

Superior Flavor

"If we would go after it in the right manner, we would find a great outlet in that market, for the flavor of our poultry is superior to that of western poultry—our biggest competitor—allowed to run wild over the ranches. A campaign of education, and willingness of our own growers to take some trouble are necessary, however."

"Further than that, there is the early broiler trade—in May and June I have seen good broilers selling in Saint John markets for fifty and sixty cents a pound. In the United States, the poultry farmers think they are doing well when their broilers sell for twenty-five and thirty cents a pound, so the possibilities in this business are evident. Shipment of broilers weighing around two pounds to meet the early market could be a large and very important industry in this province."

LAUDS CANADIANS

Marshal Petain, summoned by the blowing of a bugle, then approached the balcony of the Invalides, and in other parts of America."

Mr. Bennett referred to the New England rebellion in 1776 and a reaction in the Chignecto region, where Col. Jonathan Eddy led the group of malcontents. Eddy's attack on Fort Beauséjour, renamed Cumberland after its capture by the English, failed and his followers scattered.

Chief Justice Baxter, also detailing the early history of Chignecto, concluded with a reference to the final happy union of French and English.

"The fields were first tilled by men and women who sought peace in a new land and found strife," he remarked. "Yet as the stream of human life has flowed without cease through the centuries setting the rough and discordant setting which nature has provided for it, the traces of blood and sorrow and suffering have vanished and hate and rancor disappeared."

"French and English in this great land have come to work together, in peace, for its development, and when the world as we know it today was rent by conflict these races were found, not separate, but united in the cause of human freedom."

rum will tell the history of the settlement, colonization, conflict and finally security and peace in the union of two races—of struggle, sacrifice, endeavor and success," he declared.

"It will be a source of inspiration to those who believe that traditions make for the vitality and well-being of a community and a nation. Youth will read the story of an almost unique drama, from the adventure of the pioneers of this Isthmus to its present rich development. You will recall from your visit to this museum the sturdy peasants driving back the waters of the sea; hunters, traders, warriors, Indians, French and British missionaries, contending rival nations, the clash of arms, the disappearance of old antagonisms and the mutual enjoyment of rich heritage and a common loyalty to Canada and the British crown."

Voices Regret

The Conservative leader voiced regret at the passing of Hon. J. Veniot, former postmaster-general. The deceased went back to a settler of old Acadia. Mr. Veniot had been an enthusiastic supporter of the park and museum. More than one historian had described the museum site, a short distance from Mr. Bennett's boyhood home, as the most interesting area on the North American Continent, he said.

An expedition of 2,000 New Englanders sailed in 35 vessels from Boston on May 20, 1755, said Mr. Bennett. "It arrived at the mouth of the Missaquash River on June 2. The soldiers disembarked and encamped at Fort Lawrence where there were about 400 regulars. On June 4 the English army marched with four field pieces. Near Point-A-Buct they found a force of French and Indians in a block house. They were driven out and retreated to Beauséjour, burning the houses as they retired.

"On the 16th of that month the third strongest fort in America surrendered to the untrained and volunteer forces. The French-Asadians were to be dispatched to the colonies of the British King in other parts of America."

20 Entries In Heavyweight Tournament

Who is the best man on Prince Edward Island? This question will be pretty well answered after the Island Heavyweight Boxing Tournament is over on Friday night, August 7. Twenty of the brawniest green boxers in the province and all of them with a reputation in his particular section of the Island have laid claim to the title. The entries of these men are in the hands of Joe MacDonald and unless there are an unusual number of last minute withdrawals Friday night's show will last until midnight at least.

For many years the unofficial title "the best man on the Island" has been claimed on behalf of many rough and ready battlers. In less disciplined days attempts were made to prove the right to the title at picnics, horse races and other public functions. These bouts were never supervised and were usually stopped before much damage was done to either of the contestants.
