The bidding:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 2 ♠ Pass
2 ♠ Pass 4 ♠ Pass

Opening lead—jack of clubs.
North could have bid his hand differently to arrive at the best contract—three notrump.
It was evident this was a game-going hand after South opened bidding. With better than an opening bid of his own facing an opening bid, the problem was to reach the game contract that would have the greatest chance to succeed.

With flat distribution, and no ruffing power at all, North should have tried to reach the nine-trick notrump game rather than the ten-trick spade game.
Having bid two diamonds, he should have bid three hearts to test notrump possibilities.
In the actual case, this would have brought a three notrump bid by South, which North could readily pass.

Although the bidding of three-card suits is generally frowned upon, it is not taboo when a worthwhile purpose can be served. Had South's next bid turned out to be a raise to four hearts, or a preference to four diamonds, there would still be room to retreat to four spades.
The play at four spades involved a safety play in the trump suit. If declarer had won the club lead to take a spade finesse, he would have been defeated.
West's lone king would have taken the queen and East's two trump tricks, together with the diamond ace, would have brought a one-trick set.
But the correct play paid off in this case. South won the club, led the ace of spades, caught the king, and then lost only two spades and a diamond to make the contract.
Declarer recognized no harm could come from leading the ace of spades first. He was bound to lose at least one trump trick regardless of how the spades were divided.
There was not much point to a spade finesse since, if East had the king, it could be dealt with effectively by later leading a spade from dummy towards the queen.
But the ace of spades play had the practical advantage of guarding against a singleton king in West's hand.

Post Office Holds Sale

OTTAWA (CP)—Everything from baby's rubber pants to women's brassieres went under the auctioneer's hammer Tuesday as the Post Office department got rid of wrongly-addressed mail.

More than 400 bargain hunters called out bids that brought $3,200 to the federal treasury in the first day of the two-day auction. Among today's 250 items: A milk stool valued between $400 and $700 and an iron stove.

The brassieres were in a lot sold for $11 to Gerald Barber, 23, by Postmaster-General William Hamilton. Barber grimly outbid several women for the lot in order to keep a family tradition intact.

"My father always bought the first parcel at an auction," he said.

Brother Leo Barber got a bonus purchase a few items later. He
