Continued from page 2) it with their high ideals of devoted service to suffering fellowman. He also emphasized the loving sacrifices which the graduates had made during the past three years which might be lightened and the final goal of graduation in their chosen profession attained, and he urged the nurses in turn to express gratitude to their parents for what they had done.

Stresses Drama's

Continued from page 1 play: uncertainty of lines; faulty enunciation; and lack of imagination. The first offense the adjudicator called "unforgivable", and suggested more attention should be given to "line rehearsal". To overcome a second fault noted, Professor Sippel advised practice in private. The third fault the adjudicator blamed on the directors. "Scripts should be viewed more imaginatively so far as eye appeal is concerned," he said.

Ch'town Hospital

(Continued from page 2) they stated that he did not think any city of comparable size was so well served as Charlottetown in regard to hospitals "which would be but empty buildings if it were not the nurses."

Also officiating in the planting of other trees at the program were (left to right) J. Watson MacNaught, Mayor W.A. Currie, and of Canada, U.S.A. England, and Scotland. He read from a report, dated 1912, of the then Superintendent of Education, in which the district school management system was deplored and the larger unit advocated so that the "result would be better trustees and schools". In 1929 a Royal Commission proposed as similar solution, feeling that the system then in force "was not in the best interests of education". Illustrating the trend to larger units, the speaker stated that, since 1945 the number of local school districts in the U.S.A. has
