there's a lot more to a '66 GMC pickup than meets the eye

GMC C910 Pickup with Stepside body

Chemically-preserved wood deck can't rust or "drum"; steel skid-strips ease loading and unloading; tailgate is sand-tight. Double-steel roof with heavy, sandwiched insulation, protects cab interior from heat, cold, cuts down noise. Printed circuits for instrument panel eliminates confused tangle of wires, makes repair and circuit tracing easy.

Suspension designed to provide a soft passenger car ride, with truck strength to support profitable payloads. Rigid, ladder-type frame with strong channel-section side rails and alligator-jaw cross members resists racking, twisting. GMC Pickups are good looking. Comfortable too...all year 'round...with heavy insulation and double-steel walls and roof which keep heat outside in summer, inside in winter. GMCs combine sedan comfort with truck ruggedness. That's important. Any length trip becomes a pleasure. The new 250 cu. in. 155-horsepower standard six makes load carrying easy. The chemically-treated wood deck can't rust, and has inlaid steel strips for easy loading and unloading. The tailgate is sand-tight, with easy-action latches. For extra performance, select the 292 cu. in. six 170 hp engine or one of two V8s at 175 or 220 horsepower. Automatic transmissions are available on most models too. GMC Pickups come in half, three-quarter, and one ton sizes. There's a right one for you. Get GMC Engineering Leadership working for you in '66.
