

I have not seen this CUFFS since two weeks ago, but I still remember that I did not enjoy this flick in the least.

I don't know--maybe I was just in a bad mood because there was more ice in my pop than the law should allow. Maybe I was just a wee bit peeved at the sixteen foot man who sat in front of my five foot frame. Maybe I didn't pay enough attention to the movie because I was busy wondering why the young Mr. Slater refuses to act in a movie that requires acting. Maybe.

Nah. This movie just wasn't up to par. It is the kind of film that you should go to when you need a break from all forms of mental activity. It is the distraction necessary for the poor chap who has been studying for thirty-seven hours straight and the coffee-stone has still not set in. It was not, however, worth the pain and suffering that one has to endure in the uncomfortable "chair" at the cinema.

I will admit that I did laugh once. Unfortunately, I do not remember at what, so I cannot share the chuckle with you.

This show also has a major amount of unnecessary violence; so if you are in the mood so see fake blood plastered all over the ceiling of Christain Slater's apartment, do not hesitate to jump into your car and fork out five bucks.

The movie wasn't entirely horrible. But I will not kill my honorable principles and say that is was good, even if everyone that I know loved it and makes fun of me for slashing the stupid show.
