Adenauer's Right-Hand Man Nearing Age Of Retirement

By CARL HARTMAN

BONN, Germany (AP)—Hans Globke, who helped shape Nazi regulations against the Jews and then became Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's right-hand man, is nearing retirement. His has been one of the most disputed careers in postwar Germany.

Globke is a Roman Catholic who saved some Jews. During the Nazi period he had to face the agonizing decision: Should he stay on in his job or let some fanatic Nazi take his place? He stayed on. He says he still thinks he did right.

The East German Communist regime sentenced Globke to life imprisonment in July. There was no question of his appearing for the trial; in Bonn it was considered a propaganda show.

To many critics who are not Communists, Globke represents a shameful tolerance of men compromised through service to Adolf Hitler. Adenauer's defenders say Globke and others like him did their duty under the Nazis and are innocent of crime.

Globke is a chubby, unobtrusive-looking bureaucrat with a receding hairline, rimless glasses and a doublechin.

"I'm not as important as people think," he likes to say.

TOPPED CIVIL SERVICE

Germans think he is important. He reaches the retirement age of 65 Sept. 10 after holding West Germany's top civil service job for more than a decade.

He is an undersecretary of state, a sort of assistant chief executive to Adenauer.

When the Nazis took over in 1933 Globke was a bright young man in the Prussian ministry of the interior. He became a specialist in nationality questions—who was a German citizen, who was not and why.

He helped draft enforcing regulations for laws that denied Jews citizenship and many other rights. His enemies say this helped lay the legal basis for the Nazi extermination program.

Globke says he did everything he could to ease the laws. Many witnesses, Jewish and non-Jewish, back him up. Konrad Cardinal Preysing, the late Roman Catholic bishop of Berlin, wrote that Globke risked his own life to help the persecuted. To the cardinal, he was a valued agent of the church inside the government. He never joined the Nazi party.

Hardly a week goes by, more than 18 years after the war, without the discovery of an ex-Nazi in office or a trial for war crimes.

RETAIN JOBS

Police and army officers who served under the Nazis are among the most successful in keeping jobs. They are also subject to heavy political fire.

Under a bill before parliament, judges and prosecutors who took part in passing inhuman sentences would be forced into retirement.

Communist - ruled East Germany also has troubles with ex Nazis. There are estimates that in the People's Chamber, the Communist - style parliament, that one member in 10 is a former Nazi.

In both East and West Germany there seems only one sure solution to the issue of what to do about former Nazis and those who served them. Like Globke, they'll all eventually reach retirement age.

2 Boston-Maine Officials Are Named In Indictment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two top officials of the Boston and Maine Railroad and its former president, Patrick B. McGinnis, have been indicted here on charges of obtaining some $71,000 in personal profit from business dealings of the line.

The criminal anti-trust indictment was returned by a federal grand jury in Boston. The U.S. justice department said the indictment charged the railroad officers obtained the profit as the result of the non-competitive sale of 10 stainless steel railroad cars.

The two Boston and Maine officials named along with McGinnis are Daniel A. Benson of Weston, Mass., McGinnis' successor as president, and George F. Glacy of Brookline, Mass., vice-president for finance of the railroad. A fourth defendant in the indictment is Henry Mersey of New Haven, Conn., president of the International Railway Equipment Company of Boston. Mersey's company and the railroad itself also were named in the indictment.

One count of the indictment charged the railroad and its three officers with violating the anti-trust act, which forbids common carriers to do business with companies in which its officers have a substantial interest unless that business is conducted through competitive bidding.

SAYS SALE ILLEGAL

The indictment alleges that that railroad sold eight passenger and two combination passenger-baggage cars to International for $250,000, in August, 1958.

The next day, the indictment said, International resold the cars for $425,000.

The indictment charges all six defendants with violating a federal criminal law which forbids embezzlement or misapplication of company funds by the officers of a common carrier.

The grand jury charged that International paid $35,000 to McGinnis, $25,000 to Glacy and $11,500 to Benson, almost entirely out of the proceeds of its resale of the cars.

Space Gremlins Make Repairs?

BLACKSBURG, Va. (AP)—After more than two months of blackout the flashing lights of the Anna Firefly satellite suddenly have started blinking again and are helping scientists take the earth's measurements.

The reactivation of Anna's lights was disclosed at a space conference here by Richard B. Kershner of the applied physics laboratory, Johns Hopkins University, which developed the satellite.

The four xenon gas beacons each with the illuminating power of a lighthouse, started acting up about two months after Anna was launched last October and finally shorted out in May, leaving a gap in the mapping of the earth's surface.

"We have no explanation for the lights coming back on two weeks ago," Kershner said. "We don't like to believe in space gremlins, but we've reached the point where that's as good an explanation as any. They're working beautifully now and we're thankful."

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♦	Pass	2♥	Pass
3♥	Pass	4NT	Pass
5♥	Pass	6♥

Opening lead— nine of diamonds.

I rather like this story told by the Dutch expert, Herman Filarski. He was playing in a tournament in Holland back in 1935 when this hand came up. His partner was a good player and their opponents were rather mediocre.

Filarski (North) opened with a diamond and the bidding then progressed to six hearts in the manner shown. The sequence was quite different from what it would be today, but the contract reached was certainly a good one.

West led the nine of diamonds and South had to decide how to play the hand. After a considerable huddle he decided not to finesse and went up with the ace. He reasoned that the nine might be a singleton, in which case, if he finessed, East would take the king and return a diamond to defeat the contract immediately.

He also felt that the finesse could not possibly win, since West was not the type of player who would lead from a king against a slam, and more so, since West had no way of knowing whether the ace would show up in dummy's hand or declarer's.

South's judgment was clearly vindicated when the ace caught the king. Declarer now led the jack of hearts and went up with the ace when East followed low. This play was entirely a matter of self-preservation, since South could not afford to finesse because of the danger that West might have the king, in which case a diamond return would defeat the contract.

Again South was rewarded when the ace caught the king, and the outcome was that declarer, after playing two tricks and catching two singleton kings, was able to claim the balance.

Filarski was of course pleased by his partner's performance — spearing two kings on two tricks in a slam contract — but the opponents viewed the feat with suspicion. On the next deal they held their cards much closer to the chest.
