

SELECTED.

TO A FRIEND.

On his saying that he "judged people by their looks."

Oh! do not judge me by my looks,
You know not what I feel;
Not always does the outward show
The inward mind reveal.

The smiles may ceaseless seem to play
Across my changing face,
But could you read my heart the while,
What agony you'd trace.

But you must have a happy heart
If feelingly you speak,
Experience has not seemed to check
The smiles upon your cheek.

I would not have the world decide,
'Tis not for all to know
The searing blight that hearts can feel,
The deep and nameless woe.

For though I'm young, and may seem gay
And join the festive throng,
Ahl could you see me when alone
And hear my sudden'd song,

You would not by appearance judge,
Nor deem my spirits great,
For while a smile illumines the eye,
The heart may bleed and break.

VARIETY.

THOUGHTFUL BOY.—A little boy, more thoughtful than boys generally are, but no more than they should be, on being tumbled into the mud by a comrade, was asked why he didn't serve his abuser in the same manner, when he replied—"If I should, there would be two suits of clothes to clean!"

Some men are courageous, and some are not; but we should like to see the man who would deliberately allow a woman to catch him making mouths at her baby.

"I'm very much pressed for time," as the man said when his wife hugged and kissed him, to coax a gold watch out of him.

THE PRINTER'S KISS.

Print on my lips another kiss,
The picture of thy growing passion:
Nay, this won't do—nor this—nor this—
But now—aye! there's a "proof impression!"
