THE BIG TREES WITH KIRK DOUGLAS, AT CAPITOL SUMMERSIDE. Flying fists, lusty humor, romantic conflict and the scenic majesty of the giant redwood forests provide the colorful setting of "The Big Trees," Warner Bros. Technicolor outdoor drama which opens today at the Capitol Theatre.

With Kirk Douglas, Eve Miller and Patrice Wymore in starring roles, "The Big Trees" tells the story of the relentless lumber interests who invaded California's famed Sequoia forests to wrest them from the hands of homesteaders. Employing legal trickery and oftentimes physical force to win their ends, the outsiders manage to wreak havoc among the townspeople, murdering and pillaging until a courageous lumberman takes a firm stand against them.

When the studio decided to film "The Big Trees," the most natural thing was to shoot the outdoor sequences in the country in which the events actually took place. So following the indoor scenes filmed at the home lot, the entire company under Director Felix Feist moved to Eureka, California. There they worked in the shadow of the mighty redwoods, in the mill ponds and mills, along the rivers and on the logging railroads which haul the logs down to market, thereby authentically duplicating the background.

The featured cast includes Edgar Buchanan and Alan Hale Jr.
