Artist Encourages Eskimos To Draw

By ARCH MACKENZIE
OTTAWA (CP) — A lot of Eskimos laughed when Terry Ryan stopped his dog team at remote hunting camps in north Baffin Island and handed out drawing pencils and paper. "They nearly fell over when they learned that I had come just to give them this pencil and paper and the usual response was: 'I can't draw.'"

But Mr. Ryan, now finished with this phase of a special project, feels it was all worthwhile as an exercise in artistic stimulation among a talented people. He has about 500 drawings and sketches to show for it.

Mr. Ryan, 38, is a friendly bachelor born in Toronto who first went north in 1958 as a federal weather observer. For the last three years he has been secretary and art adviser to the West Baffin Eskimo Co-operative which, among other things, markets the distinctive, distinguished Eskimo stone cuts and prints produced by Cape Dorset people.

He's an artist himself, with a Toronto exhibition to his credit last year and another pending. Most of his work has featured Arctic themes, especially landscapes.

ENCOURAGE DRAWING
He reported back to Ottawa recently, fanned and trim, on a project which is backed with a Canada Council grant—one of six projects providing a total of $18,000 to encourage the Eskimo to draw.

Mr. Ryan set out in February to visit Arctic Bay, Pond Inlet and Clyde River on the northern end of Baffin Island, whose eastern flank faces Greenland. The three communities numbering about 600 people in their areas lie about 500 miles apart and Pond Inlet, in the centre, is 2,000 miles north of Toronto. The trip by dog team was routine to old-hand Ryan, although even the Eskimos complained about the unusually cold weather which produced temperatures of 50 below zero in March when a little relief at least is expected.

Mr. Ryan passed out the paper and pencils on one trip and then picked up the results a few weeks later on his way back.

He got mostly black-and-white drawings although he had dispensed some colored pencils. Variety was infinite. He tends to place more value on the contributions of the older people, some of whom he expects will keep drawing for the fun of it. He left an agent in each area to collect any further drawings.

The older people are less concerned about giving you the kind of drawing that they think you might want—they are less derivative to that extent," Mr. Ryan said.

Some of the drawings are detailed work of the area's distinctively styled parkas, pants and other fur, skin and cloth apparel.

Some drawings crudely display hunting scenes and there are some landscapes too—a departure from drawings trends in Cape Dorset farther south.

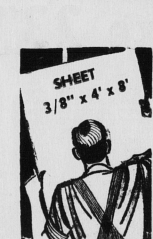

Mr. Ryan plans to sift through the drawings he has collected. Then he probably will compile the best in a book.
