Amateur Cavalcade At Montague

A capacity crowd attended the Shur-Gain Amateur Cavalcade, sponsored by the Home and School Association, held at Ye's Theatre, Montague last evening. Mr. Eric Jessome, Kensington, acted as master of ceremonies, and piano accompanists were Mrs. Elsie Waterworth, Mrs. Charles Fraser, and Miss Peggy Beck, Montague, and Mrs. John Cook, Murray River.

The judges were Mrs. C. A. Shaw, Mrs. Archie Hume, Montague, Mr. Fenner Stewart, Brackley, and Mr. Jessome. There were twenty-six entries and each contestant was heartily applauded by the appreciative audience.

On behalf of the Home and School Association, Rev. F. N. Young, spoke briefly stressing the value of music, especially music appreciation in the life of the child.

During the intermission, before the judges presented their report, a humorous skit by Mrs. Ralph Beck was very much enjoyed.

The following were the contest winners: 1. Edgar Dewar (11), Brudenell, recitation, "Crowing Indig"; 2. Alice MacDonald (11) and Eric MacDonald (13), Brudenell, piano duet, "Sandman"; 3. Judy Yorston (5), Roseneath, vocal solo "Jesus Loves Me"; 4. Laura Collings (10) Montague, vocal solo "A Secret"; 5. Barry White (8) and Wayne Nicholson (8), Montague, vocal duet "When I Am Big"; 6. Jeanne MacKinnon (11) and Fay Kennan (13), Murray River, vocal duet, "Cockles and Mussels".

The program closed with the singing of "God Save The Queen."

16 inches of frost had been thawed.

The strip of land being warmed is in the centre of an area four times its size which earlier had been cleared of snow by a bulldozer. Forty head of Konstantine Haun's cattle will be slaughtered and buried in the huge pit. Another 160 diseased cattle from other farms will be brought in.

Shooting of the diseased animals by R.C.M.P. constables will start tomorrow. The carcasses will be placed at the bottom of the pit. They will be cut open and covered with unslaked lime. Once the Haun farm pit is filled, the crews will move to a new burial site.

One young farmer, who is going to lose his entire herd, showed up at the site for a few minutes with his wife and small child. They watched the fire for a few minutes, then walked back to their truck without uttering a word.

Another farmer spoke quietly of his cattle which will help fill the big hole. He said the animals are "right back on their feed and milking well." But he conceded that slaughter was the only hope of checking the disease.

ing with transportation, education, annuities and possibly revision of the Criminal Code.

Political circles suggest there will be enough business to keep parliament in session until August, unless the government decides to prorogue parliament at the start of the summer and call another session in the fall.

That is what it did last year, parliament rose June 30 and returned to work early in October.

Committees may produce some of the biggest debates this year.

The government is expected to set up a special committee to undertake the task of revising constituency boundaries on the basis of the latest distribution of population, arising from the 1951 census. These committee sittings always produce slam-bang political debates.

Some parliamentary fireworks also can be expected to develop from the sittings of the newly-established defence committee empowered to study current defence expenditures.

Curling At Montague

A. E. Sullivan skipped his team to victory at the Montague Curling Club last night to win the Ye's Theatre tickets defeating Dr. L. A. Johnston 9-7. A large number of interested spectators were on hand to watch the game which produced some interesting moments. At the end of the seventh end Sullivan led 6-5, and on the eighth end had a perfect tee with eight stones counted. Johnston had only his last stone to throw. On a perfect draw shot he entered a narrow port to settle on the button and tie the game, which drew a great hand from the spectators. Johnston then went on to take the lead in the next end with a singleton, but Sullivan came right back in the last end to count three and win the game and prize.

information to that effect. But that was the end of the trail. Bruntjen has disappeared.

Every railway station, whistle stop and hotel in Ontario and Quebec is being watched. Local police are co-operating with the R.C.M.P. which appealed to all Canadians to help find the man. So far no new clues to his whereabouts have been unearthed.

Agricultural officials reported Tuesday that the man actually had been located and a Regina report said the immigrant was spotted at Port Arthur.

Today the R.C.M.P. first said the immigrant had boarded a train at Port Arthur but after further investigation said that the man had been employed at Heron Bay, on the C.P.R. main line. It was there that he apparently boarded the train.

Mounties said that when last seen, Bruntjen wore a grey coat and was hatless. But the grey coat description came from Winnipeg where Bruntjen stopped after leaving the Leonard T. Waas farm at McLean, Sask., about 40 miles from Regina.

Immigration authorities reported that Bruntjen came to Canada last October and was placed on the Waas farm on Nov. 2. Regina reports said previously that he had been employed there Nov. 18-21. The outbreak was reported Nov. 26.

Bruntjen went east to obtain bush work. The fear is that he may be carrying the virus, sometimes known to live for long periods of time, on his clothes or in his feet. Humans are not affected by the disease, but they can transmit it to livestock.

Meanwhile, a mild paralysis took hold of Canadian cattle markets with movement of live cattle from the Prairies sealed off both to Eastern and British Columbia markets and all Canadian livestock and most meats stopped from entering the United States.

At Edmonton cattle shippers loaded a 29-car special livestock train in an effort to beat the British Columbia embargo on Alberta cattle. They thought the border would close until tonight but Victoria said the ban went into effect Tuesday. The train may be turned back when it reaches the border.

Two encouraging signs were: 1. An agriculture department statement that the U.S. may change its regulations affecting Canada since Canada was well-staffed with experienced veterinarians.

2. A department report from Regina that no new cases of the disease have been established. So far, there are 24 known foot-and-mouth cases in South Saskatchewan.

In Vancouver, Agriculture Minister Gardiner, on his way back to Ottawa to take charge of federal eradication plans, said he believes the situation is "well under control."

He reaffirmed his stand against provincial embargoes, such as now seal off the prairie cattle, and said he felt there is nothing to be gained by drawing lines. His view is that inter-provincial borders should not be closed against livestock shipments while Ottawa tries to persuade the U.S. to lift its embargo on Canadian cattle.

Cattle prices on the Ontario stockyards dipped sharply amid George Preece were appointed on a program committee for the next meeting. Plans were discussed for holding a white elephant sale and social evening at the home of Mrs. Neil Hooley. Each member was asked to bring a friend.

At the close of the meeting a social hour was enjoyed, the program including a contest and humorous reading by Mrs. Hilchey. Lunch was served by the hostess, assisted by a committee of ladies.

ADVANCE GUARD

McLure told The Guardian he would remind the Defence Production Minister that Prince Edward Island was still in the framework of the Canadian Confederation.

"I know we are not a great industrial province like Ontario or Quebec," the Queen's member observed, "but I think we should be awarded some contracts for dairy products and foodstuffs like those that are going to various Canadian firms at the present time. I don't suggest for a minute that there is any discrimination against our province in the matter of these contracts. It is possible, however, that we have been inadvertently overlooked. This is something that can easily be remedied."

J. Angus MacLean, junior Conservative member for Queen's is expected in Ottawa tomorrow and J. Watson MacNaught, Liberal member for Prince and parliamentary assistant to Fisheries Minister Mayhew will arrive later in the week. All three Senators are expected to be in their places both for the installation of Canada's new governor-general, Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey tomorrow morning, and the opening of parliament in the afternoon.

confusion concerning the possible effects of the foot-and-mouth disease. Some market and industry men feared Ontario cattlemen would become panicky and flood the market.

Grimmett of all reports was one from Regina where burial pits are being dug to hold infected herds being destroyed. Grim-faced dairy farmers and curious onlookers watched as piles of burning coal and wood thawed frozen ground on one farm outside of Regina where a burial pit is being dug. Neware cameras recorded the gloomy scene.

Farmers hated to see their cattle go, but they knew that slaughter was the only way to halt the disease. Animals destroyed will be paid for by the federal government at the rate of established commercial value for the animals. As the Prairie sealing-off took effect, there was the first outcry against the embargo. The Manitoba Government protested to the Federal Government against what it termed efforts by Eastern Canada to extend the embargo on Prairie livestock shipments to include dressed meats.
