Literature And Life

By BOOKMAN

IT IS ENOUGH

Several men one evening in London were discussing the age-old question, "If you had the privilege of choosing would you care to live your life over again?"

A lawyer, a clergyman, and a successful business man were talking the matter over, and they all said "No." They were like men who had seen a play and did not care to see it over again—one visit was enough.

This is a question that youth does not ask, for their thoughts are long, long thoughts. "It is when life slips to the west that one asks this question. It does not mean that life has been uninteresting, or not worth while. It is nature's way of reconciling us to our lot. We bow in submission to the order of things.

Nor must this question be confused with that other—a cynical one—"Is life worth living?" Job, according to the Bible story, cursed the day of his birth and we are told that Dean Swift recognized his birthday as a day of mourning.

Lord Byron said many hopeless things among these things: "There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away. When the glow of early thought declines in feelings dull decay. . . . As springs in deserts found seem sweet, all brackish though they be. So midst the withered waste of life, those tears would flow for me."

"The room, the canker and the grief" were his alone. Did not Sir Thomas Browne say that he wished that he could bequeath his mind to some but that would take the interest out of life, because the uncertainty and the experiment which we have to make give life its interest. Some one has said, "Take away the uncertainty of life and you take away all the magic." The mathematical genius cannot bequeath his ability to his son, the lad must begin with the multiplication table and go on from strength to strength.

The Bible truth is evident here, "Every man must bear his own burden, and while there are burdens which we may share, there is one that is unshiftable—a personal responsibility.

If life were to be lived over again it would need to be lived on the "as-is" unknown terms that we knew or it would not be worth living at all. But like Charles Lamb we would miss "the old familiar faces", and would be homesick on the earth.

We are interesting to our contemporaries and they are interesting to us. Old mother nature is a wise old dame and she causes us to pass this way but once. The dolls a little girl played with and the hats and balls that interested the little boy are laid away, and we do not find them in later years sitting down and weeping, because they are done with them. Nature attends to that, and every stage in the human journey has interest of its own.

I recall in my school days an old man passing where we were playing ball and he said something cynically, "Boys play on; it is the happiest time you will ever have. It was happy and care-free, but still after all these years I can honestly say that youth did not exhaust all the happiness that life had to give; for every action of our years has its own charm. Marcus Aurelius tells how it is possible to live our life over again —"Come," he says, "and I will tell you how you may live your time over again. Do but accept, and review what you have seen already, and the work is done."

The old Rabbi, Ben Ezra, was wise and he said: "As it was better, youth should strive, through acts un-couth. Toward making, then repose on aught found made. So, better age, exempt From strife should know, than tempt. Further, Thou waitest age, wait Death, nor be afraid!"

SALMON PRICE SET

VANCOUVER. — (CP) — British Columbia fishermen will get 20 cents a pound for sockeye salmon this year. An agreement between the salmon canners operating committee and the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union (F.L.C.) sets salmon prices for the current season and ends more than two months negotiations.

NO SALARY

There was no salary attached to the office of British prime minister until 1837, and the holder usually combined with it some other appointment, which carried a salary.

Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan (Copyright)

Charity is the name for Christian love, but there is perhaps no word in our language which, in the course of time, has suffered such an utter perversion of its true meaning. Today charity very seldom indicates love. It indicates handouts of one kind or another. The word "love" today is usually associated with either sentimentality or sex.

We still speak of love being the greatest thing in the world, but when we do, we do not mean that sex or sentiment are the world's most priceless treasures, the greatest of God's gifts to man or the chief of the Christian virtues. We are quite conscious that we are speaking of something else, something which we might be hard put to define, something which we are conscious that we have to a great extent lost. There is a vacuum in our lives. Without knowing it, perhaps, we mean the love that is charity.

Charity does not include almsgiving, but it is not restricted to that. Giving to the poor is charity, but it is not the whole of it. Collections for the afflicted either here or abroad are called charity, because it is not done in the spirit of love. A very sizeable portion of our taxes go to support organized charities, and we know that taxes are paid rather grudgingly.

Charity today means giving money to someone. That there is need for this, no one can deny. Human need today is very great, but godless materialism has succeeded in isolating our hearts from others so that we have become self-contained units and all appeals to us have to be colored by self-interest. Charities today to some extent are intended to save our consciences for our rude treatment of our fellow-men. It is not unknown that huge amounts of money have been given in "charity" by men who refused to pay those who worked for them a living wage. The slogan of many fund-raising campaign orators is "give to save your own necks." We feed the hungry so that they won't become Communists and disturb our self-complacency and the prevalent social order.

Charity, finally, has to cease to be concerned with whether people are worthy of it or not. Probably, in a lot of cases, people don't deserve love. But do we deserve it from God? Yet a Christian life is intolerable without the realization that God loves us, however little we deserve it. We should try to love man after the manner in which God loves us.

Must Be Universal

Charity, too, has to be universal. It is not only the poor who need charity. How many of the wealthy there are who violently destroy themselves. Perhaps there never was love in their lives. How poor they really are. Everyone needs charity, the rich, as well as the poor, saints as well as sinners, our enemies as well as our friends.

Charity is not something which we are free to practice, or not practice, if we are to remain Christians. It is not a matter of personal whim. It is the mark by which Christ's disciples are to be known. Not to have charity is to dissociate oneself from Christ.

Charity, finally, has to cease to be concerned with whether people are worthy of it or not. Probably, in a lot of cases, people don't deserve love. But do we deserve it from God? Yet a Christian life is intolerable without the realization that God loves us, however little we deserve it. We should try to love man after the manner in which God loves us.

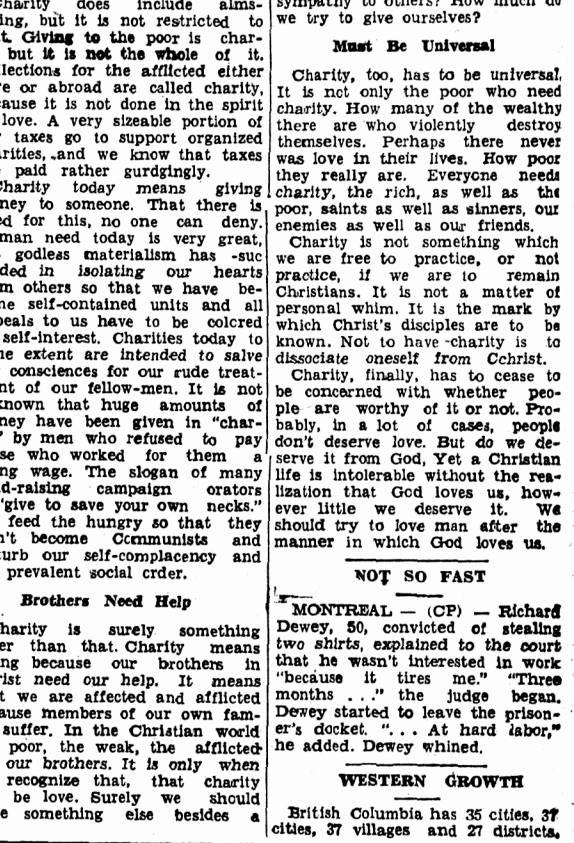

NOT SO FAST

MONTREAL — (CP) — Richard Dewey, 50, convicted of stealing two shirts, explained to the court that he wasn't interested in work "because it tires me." "Three months . . ." the judge began. Dewey started to leave the prisoner's dock. " . . . At hard labor," he added. Dewey whined.
