conditions

In some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is rapid. For this reason we put up a 50c. size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children.

In other conditions gain must be slow, sometimes almost imperceptible, health can't be built up in a day. For this Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment, food rather than medicine, food prepared for tired and weak digestsions.

THE SIGN OF THE FOUR

By A. CONAN DOYLE.

"I confess that I had my doubts myself when I reflected upon the great traffic which had passed along the London road in the interval. My fears never appeared, however. Toby never hesitated or swerved, but waddled on in his peculiar rolling fashion. Clearly, the pungent smell of the crocote rose high above all other contending scents."

"Do not imagine," said Holmes, "that I depend for my success in this case upon the mere chance of one of these fellows having put his foot in the chemical. My knowledge now which would enable me to trace them in many different ways. This, however, is the readiest, and, since fortune has put it into my hands, I should be culpable if I neglected it. It has, however, prevented the case from becoming the petty little intellectual problem which it at one time promised to be. There might have been some credit to be gained out of it, but for this fatal snafu."

"There is credit, and to spare," said I. "I assure you, Holmes, that I marvel at the means by which you unravel your reasons. This case even more than I did in the Jefferson Hope murder. The thing seems to me to be deeper and more inexplicable. How, for example, did you describe with such confidence the wooden-legged man?"

"Pshaw, my dear boy! It was simple. I had a hunch that it was a theatrical. It is all patent and above board. Two officers who are in command of a convict guard learn an important secret as to a buried treasure. A man is drawn for them by an Englishman named Jonathan Small. You remember that we saw the name upon the chart in Captain Morstan's possession. He had signed it in behalf of himself and his associates—the sign of the four, as he somewhat dramatically called it. At the same time, the treasure—two or three—gets the treasure and brings it to England, leaving, we may suppose, the wooden-legged man which he received it untroubled. Now, then, why did not Jonathan Small get the treasure himself? The answer is simple. The chart is dated at a time when Morstan was brought into close association with convicts. Jonathan Small did not get the treasure because he was not in the possession of the chart, and could not get away."

"But this is mere speculation," said I. "It is more than that. It is the only hypothesis which covers the facts. Let us see how it fits in with the sequel. Major Sholto remains at peace for some years happy in the possession of his treasure. Then he receives a letter from India which gives him a great fright. What was that?"

"A letter to the effect that the men whom he had wronged had been set free."

"Or had escaped. That is much more likely, for he would have known that the imprisonment was a mere ruse. It would not have been a surprise to him. What does he do then? He guards himself against a wooden-legged man—a white man, mark you, for he mistakes a white tradesman for him, and actually fires a pistol at him. Now, only one white man's name is on the chart. The others are Hindoos or Mohammedans. There is no other white man. Therefore we may say with confidence that the wooden-legged man is identical with Jonathan Small. Does the reasoning strike you as being faulty?"

"No, it is clear and concise." "Well, now, let us put ourselves in the place of Jonathan Small. Let us look at it from his point of view. He comes to England with the double idea of regaining what he would consider to be his rights and of having his revenge upon the man who had wronged him. He finds out that the man who had wronged him is now a free man, and very possibly he establishes communication with some one inside the house. There is this butler, Lal Rao, whom we have not seen. Mrs. Bernstone gives him a far from a good character. Small could not find out, however, where the treasure was hid, for no one ever knew, save the major and one faithful servant who had died. Suddenly Small learns that the major is on his death-bed. In a frenzy he seeks the secret of the treasure, but he finds the guardian of the treasure, makes his way to the dying man's window, and is only deterred from entering by the presence of his sons. Mad with hate, however, against the dead man, he enters the room that night, searches his private papers in the hope of discovering some memorandum relating to the treasure, and finally leaves a memento of his visit in the coat of arms upon the wall. He had doubtless planned beforehand that should he slay the major he would leave some such record upon the wall as a sign that it was not a common murder, but, from the point of view of the four associates, something in the nature of an act of justice. Whimsical and bizarre conceits of this kind are common enough in the annals of crime, and usually afford valuable indications as to the criminal. Do you follow all this?"

"Very clearly." "Now, what could Jonathan Small do? He could only continue to keep his secret watch upon the efforts made to find the treasure. Possibly he leaves England and only comes back at intervals. Then comes the discovery of the secret, and he is in a way into the room. He bores no grudge against Bartholomew Sholto, and would have preferred if he could have been simply sound and gagged. He did not wish to put his head in a halter. The savage instinct of his companion had broken out, and the poison had done its work. So Jonathan Small left his record, lowered the treasure-box to the ground, and followed it himself. That was the train of events as far as can be determined. Of course as to his personal appearance he must be middle-aged, and must be somewhat after serving his term in such an oven as the Andamans. His height is readily calculated from the length of his stride, and we know that he was a tall man. His hairness was the one point which impressed itself upon Thaddeus Sholto when he saw him at the window. I don't know that there is anything else."

"The associate?" "Ah, well, there is no great mystery in that. But you will know all about it soon enough. How sweet the morning air is! See how that one little bird toots like a tink feather from some granite chimney, now the sun rim of the sun pushes itself over the London cloud-bank. It shines on a good many folk, but on no one I dare bet, who are so strange errand than you and I. How small we feel with our petty ambitions and strivings in the presence of the great elemental forces of nature! Are you well up in your Jean Paul?"

"Fairly so. I worked back to him three or four days ago. I dare bet that was like following the brook to the parent lake. He makes one curious but profound remark. It is that the chief proof of nobility, there lies in his perception of his own smallness. It argues, you see, a power of comparison and of appreciation, which is in itself a proof of nobility. There is much food for thought in Richter. You have not a pistol, have you?"

"I have my stick." "It is just possible that we may need something of the sort if we get to their lair. Jonathan I shall leave to you, but if the other turns nasty I shall shoot him dead." He took out his revolver as he spoke, and, having loaded two of the chambers, he put it back into the right-hand pocket of his jacket. We had, during this time, been following the guidance of Toby down the half-rural, villa-lined roads which lead to the palpable. Now, however, we were beginning to come amongst continuous streets, where laborers and dockmen were already astir, and slatternly women were taking down shutters and brushing doorsteps. At the square-topped corner public houses business was just beginning, and rough-looking men were emerging, rubbing their sleeves across their heads after their morning wet. Strange dogs sauntered up, and stared wonderingly at the two men who were passing. Toby looked to the right now to the left, but trotted onward with his nose to the ground and an occasional eager whine, which spoke of a hot scent."

"We had traversed Streatham, Brixton, Camberwell, and now found ourselves in Kennington Lane, having borne away through the side streets to the east of the Oval. The men whom we pursued seemed to have taken a curious zig-zag road. They had never kept to the main road if a parallel side street would serve their turn. At the foot of Kennington Lane they had edged away to the left through Bond Street and Miles street. Where the latter street turns into Knight's place, Toby ceased to advance, but began to run backward and forward with one eye cocked and the other drooping, the very picture of canine indecision. Then he waddled round in circles, looking up to us from time to time, as if he sought for sympathy in his embarrassment."

"What that the deuce is the matter with the dog?" Holmes. "They surely would not take a cab, or go off to a billiard."

HEART-BEATS.

The Reason Why the Heart Flutters, Palpitates, and is Oppressed, and How to Relieve it.

The heart has a hard old time of it and within itself does not excite much disease, but it is very often called upon to display the troubling symptoms of palpitation, fluttering, labored breathing, oppression, etc., on account of diseased kidneys offering increased resistance to the passage of the blood through their defective secretive structures, causing a morbid change in the blood unsuited to nourish the tissues and noxious to them. The minute arteries resist the passage of this foul blood, resulting in the muscular walls of the arteries and the ventricle of the heart becoming partially paralyzed and from this cause results much of the so-called heart disease, which is owing to wasting kidneys not being able to perform their functions. In order to relieve heart trouble remove the cause in the kidneys with Chase's Kidney Pills. They relieve the blood of poisonous deposits, it goes on its way a stream of health, relieving the heart and imparting strength to every tissue of the body. When your heart is in trouble Chase's Pills quickly remove the causing condition, no matter whether it exists in the form of disorder of the kidneys, liver, stomach, or of nervous affection. Sold by all dealers. Price 25c. Edimondson Bates & Co., Toronto.

Struck a New Lid. The Bordeaux Claret Co. struck a new and fruitful idea when it conceived the notion of putting a cheap wine upon the market at prices which would bring it within the reach of all. For the long profit and the slow sale is not as good business as the small profit and the great sale, and $3 and $4 per dozen quart appeals to the whole people, whereas $8 for a wine not one whit better—if as good—could only appeal to a section of the people. Wine upon the poor man's table, wholesome wine which will do him and his family good, at a little over the price of poor beer. The famous Medice wines. Selling enormously all over Canada. Centerlets. A few years ago a great discovery was made. Principled persons are trying to prey upon and dupe people who are led to ask for kidney treatment.

Some of the methods adopted by imitators are as follows: First—To imitate the size, color and shape of Dodd's Kidney Pills and sell them by count.

Second—To put them up to appear very nearly the same and to be offered at the same price.

Third—To look on the word "Kidney" in naming catarrhic pills so as to increase sales of mere physic.

Fourth—To give a name so near to Dodd's as to weary people may be deceived and think they are getting Dodd's. Look out for such dodges. When you want kidney medicine you want the best. And ought not to be the subject for any risk.

So beware. That wonderful people, the Chinese, are said to have constructed bridges from very early times, but the stone to us date from comparatively late periods, and the material they are timber structures of the cantilever type.
