HOW TO REAR PULLETS ON THE RANGE

As soon as winter weather disappears, pullets can again be raised on the open range. Below are tested range-rearing management steps which, if followed, will result in a profitable flock:

- Chicks can be put on the range when they are about seven to eight weeks of age. When they near six weeks of age, separate the pullets from the cockerels and gradually change their feed from Miracle Chick Starter to Miracle Growing Mash.
- Give them scratch grain—early in the day, and before they roost. Keep water fountains filled with fresh, clean water and either sprinkle medium size grit on top of their mash, or put it in separate hoppers.
- It is very necessary to provide "Range Shelters", a common size being 10 feet by 12 feet for 100 birds. Keep these shelters at least 250 feet apart and move them at least once every four weeks.
- It is most important to see that there is plenty of shade for the pullets during the hottest parts of the day. Where there is no natural shade such as bushes and trees, a crop of sunflowers, planted in rows, will provide excellent shade.
- Range Shelters should be equipped with nests so that pullets will be used to them and not lay eggs on the floor when they are put in the laying house.
- Range-rearing also calls for good pasture conditions. Even when the soil has been properly prepared and the right grasses well established, a definite program of mowing and renewal is necessary to achieve best results and to guard against disease and parasite infestation.
- Pullets should be left on the range until 15% to 20% are laying. They should be graded before being housed, and the earliest maturing ones put into a separate pen. Some feed hoppers and water containers should be set on the floor at first, as range-bred birds are not used to flying up to raised hoppers and fountains.
- When pullets reach 20% production it is time to put them on Miracle Laying Mash—making the change-over a gradual one. Miracle Laying Mash will give layers everything they need to make eggs and still keep up their own strength.
