

Consistent Bakery Winner at Stanley Fair

Over the years at Stanley's century-old fair, a goodly crop of top awards for baking has come to Mrs. Frank Good, of Stanley, N.B. Recognized as an authority on cooking from rolls to doughnuts, Mrs. Good helped produce the Victory Cook Book still widely in use through the district. "Certainly it takes experience to be a good cook," says Mrs. Good, "but it also takes the best ingredients. For example, you have to use a good reliable yeast to get top results for rolls and bread. I myself use Fleischmann's Yeast . . . Fleischmann's is so active and dependable."

That's where they all agree! Prize-winning cooks say that Fleischmann's Yeast simply has what it takes to give you perfect risings each time. No wonder it's been the favorite with Maritime women for over 80 years!

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Lest you think that engineers have no thought for the more ordinary joys of life, it is interesting to know that Charles Richardson, the resident engineer on the Severn Tunnel, which connects South Wales and the South and West of England, designed the first cricket bat with a can-spliced handle.

When Zane Grey wrote his stirring novel, "The Last of the Plainsmen," he rushed to the publishing house of Harper in the belief that he had a winner. Two weeks passed. Nothing happened. Unable to endure the suspense any longer, Grey went to New York and called on the publishers. They passed him his manuscript and said, "We are sorry, but there is nothing in this story to convince us that you can ever write fiction." This news actually caused Grey such a shock that he wept like a babe.

His second novel, "Heritage of the Desert," occupied his next year. When it was completed, he offered it to Harper, who replied with the usual polite rejection slip. The writer begged the editor to take the script home and read it at night. A couple of days later, Grey returned, and the editor looked highly pleased. He said, "We're going to publish your story, Grey, but you have my wife to thank, not me. She thinks it great, and she should know, after sitting up all night, reading it."

"Heritage of the Desert" was an immediate and immense success, but it took an editor's wife to see the gold that lay in its crudely written long hand. That was the beginning of a highly successful writing career, which placed the once poverty stricken Zane Grey on the pinnacle of fame and fortune.

With all the boasted progress, the United States was the last of the larger Western Nations to adopt workman's compensation laws. In the '80's the act was enacted in Germany and in Austria, in the '90's in Norway, Finland, Great Britain, Denmark, Italy and France and from 1900 to 1910 in New Zealand, South Australia, Netherlands, Luxembourg, British Columbia, Russia, etc. (See Lindley Clark, W. C. L. of the U. S. A., etc.)

The first suit in which the player sought protection under the defense of "common employment" occurred in 1841. Prior to 1841, there was not much pressure for compensation as railroads were only in their infancy, and coal production was just getting under way.

In the autumn of 1876, a gang of counterfeiters attempted to steal the body of Abraham Lincoln and hold it for a ransom amounting to one-fifth of a million dollars. Why? Because Gen. Boyd, the master engraver who manufactured their counterfeit bills, had been caught red-handed and thrown into prison. The crooks knew there was no law in the State of Illinois making it a crime to steal a corpse.

So, on November 6, the gang boarded a train enroute to Lincoln's home town of Springfield, Illinois. Finally, they arrived at the cemetery, saw the padlock off the iron door of Lincoln's tomb, stepped inside, pried the marble lid off the sarcophagus and lifted the wooden casket half out. They never got any farther, however, for one of their number, a stool-pigeon and a former secret-service agent, uttered a password that brought a number of police

BULLETINS FROM BIRDLAND

WINIFRED E. WILSON

WICKER BASKETS

If you want a neatly made, semi-circular, wicker basket, encourage Chimney Swifts to build in your chimney. Provide them with a dead tree from which they can snap off little twigs as they fly past, and have no fire in your fire-place until some time in August when you are sure all the birds have left. Then put a stick up the chimney and gently knock down the Swifts' beautifully varnished, wicker-work nest.

The spring arrival of these birds in settled Canada is about the third week in May. Since civilization came to America, they have shown a preference for our chimneys, although they occasionally still use hollow trees as was their old habit. Now they are on the look-out for a vacant house. Our summer cottages are in great demand, so that when we are ready to move in we may find a family already in residence. All Swifts ask is to be left undisturbed in your chimney—but that means no fire for you. Unused tumble-down dwellings are very suitable, and frequently attract them.

Chimney Swifts' weak feet are no good for walking or even perching; however, they are just the things for clinging to bricks in a perpendicular position. Their rounded tails end in spines, and are used to jab into the bricks for support. Dozens of tiny twigs are carried down the chimney to the scene.

Rushing into the tomb, they ordered the thieves to surrender. Someone lighted a match. The partly removed shell could be seen by the flickering light, but not a trace of the crooks. Somehow, they had managed to make their escape.

Ten days later they were rounded up in Chicago and brought back to Springfield to stand trial. The group which tried to steal the body of Lincoln went to Joliet Prison for only twelve months. Believe it or not!

What man attended school for 11-12 days, had 27 wives, became an outstanding leader of the 19th Century, built a great economic empire and made it blossom like a rose?

That man was Brigham Young. The story of how he accomplished all these things is one of the few great dramas of American history. It is interesting to note some of the highlights of this remarkable man's life: At the age of forty-four, he married four women on the same day. He had fifty-six children, twenty-one of whom were born of his two favorite wives. Once two of his wives presented him with children on the same day. His last baby was born when he was sixty-eight.

Despite all this, Brigham Young was a religious, serious-minded man, who believed the Old Testament literally. In other words, he practiced polygamy because David, Solomon, and others had set the example. Everyone is entitled to his opinion, but William Seward, who was Lincoln's Secretary of State, declared that America never produced a greater statesman than the much married Brigham Young.

and glued to an upright, inner wall and to each other. Generally a few of last autumn's dead leaves are set in near the join. Four or five pure white eggs, unusually long and narrow, rest directly on the twigs, which have not only been stuck together, but glazed over with bird saliva. The saliva glands of Chimney Swifts are extraordinarily developed. It is this cement-like excretion which the Chinese find so palatable, tempting them to eat the nests.

Just about three weeks are required for incubation, the parents taking turns on the nest. The one of duty spends the entire period in the air. They can be differentiated from Swallows by the contour of their bodies, (no tail showing in flight), and the rapid beating of their bow-shaped wings alternating with long, sweeping sails. On returning home with dinner of flying insects trapped in their wide mouths, they lift up their wings, butterfly fashion, and drop into their chimney.

When Swifts gather for fall migration, it is common for several hundred to use one chimney as a dormitory.

Have birds good memories?

MEMORIES

(Dedicated to Forest Hill P. E. I.)

From out the windows of my office I look eastward toward the sea
T'wixt the towers of peaking buildings
That rise up majestically.

Out against the sky and spaces
Where we'd linger for awhile
From the fence-in of the office
To my native P. E. Isle.

And our childhood days of by-gones
When we sat within the school
Peering out the open windows
At the fields and water cool

As they gurgled thru the alders
From their source in woodland springs
Winding in and out of detours
Chording with the bird that sings.

How my boyish heart was saddened
By the blackboards and the books
When such open spaces called me
To the fields and running brooks

That we'd dam with sods and branches
In the alders at the bend
Where we'd rush to from the schoolhouse
Many happy hours to spend.

Now I crave those fields and meadows
Just to linger for awhile
In that place of boyhood memories
On my native P. E. Isle.
