CHAPTER XX

"Quite a lot!" Strang told him, setting down his half empty glass. "And to start with, I might as well tell you that I'm wise to you now, so you can cut out the bluff and come down to hard tacks."

Strang laughed shortly. "Well, if you insist, I'll tell you," he said. "To start with, I know now that you're a fake right through. You're no more Thurlow than I am, and you've got the pigs rooting out-side! I've always known that this fishy, you slipped up once or twice and I spotted it. And that was why you aren't let yourself go with the booze, wasn't it? You were scared you would remember a bit too much and let the cat out of the bag! I'll admit I didn't suspect the reason for it at the time, but I was pretty certain it wasn't genuine from the beginning."

"You bet I will," Strang retorted. "I've not half finished yet! Well, if I had suspicions before, that old fool gave me all the answers to-night. Or not all, perhaps, but quite enough to go on with. It's true I don't know who you are even now, or why you tried this game on; but I'm certain who you are not, and that's all I'm interested in. You're not Thurlow, and you're not the Resident here! And I'd have been quite within my rights to have you slapped into irons and sent straight back to Auckland aboard the schooner as an impostor. Legally speaking, I'm the acting Resident here — and have been all the time."

that I know you're a fake." "There may be two opinions about that," Thurlow said slowly. "Still, let's hear what all this is leading up to. You've got something more than steam to blow off I take it."

slowly disappeared among the trees. His head felt hot and uncomfortable. Moving among the trees he was very careful not to touch even a twig with those growing antlers on his head. You see they were very tender. Not only would it be painful to strike them against anything, but it might so damage them that they would be misshapen when finally they became fully grown, and hardened.

"I don't like him," said one twin. "Mother Lightfoot's eyes twinkled. 'You'll be just like him some day,' said she."

"What makes him so cross?" asked the other.

"He isn't feeling good," replied Mother.

"He's an old grouch," said the other twin.

"I hope you'll grow up to be just like him," said Mother. She wasn't thinking of Lightfoot's grouchiness just then. She was thinking of how handsome and wonderful he had been, and would be again when those antlers were fully grown.

LONDON, (CP)—The British and Foreign Bible Society, with an estimated pre-war deficit of 40,000,000 Bibles throughout the world, reports it now has supplied 38,000,000 of them. Ten new languages have been introduced, providing Scriptures in 818 languages.
