Drowned in a Mill Pond.

MRS. HENRY HOWARD'S SAD DEATH.

A melancholy drowning accident occurred yesterday morning, which resulted in the death of Mrs. Henry Howard, who resides about two miles from North Wiltshire Station. Mrs. Howard had been a woman of unsound mind, and was for two years confined in Falconwood Asylum. She recovered and was brought home, and up to the time of the accident was comparatively sane. Yesterday morning she told her husband she intended to bathe in the mill pond, a short distance from the dwelling, and shortly afterwards, in company with her little girl, went to the pond. The little girl told her not to go in, but she did not take the advice and shortly waded in to her armpits. The little girl saw her slip and sink beneath the surface. She called to the father for help but he only arrived in time to see his wife sink a third time and drowned. The body was recovered shortly afterwards, and an inquest was held. The jury returned a verdict of accidental drowning.

A Terrible Crime.

A TRIPLE MURDER IN CORK OF THE MOST REVOLTING CHARACTER.

The record of the assizes which opened in Cork (Ireland) on the 29th ult., is blackened by a triple murder of the most revolting nature. "Blood will have blood" bids fair to be exemplified in this case, for although the crime was committed seven years ago, the evidence for the crown is so convincing that there is little chance of the prisoners escaping. Wm. Sheehan and his brother-in-law, David Brown, are charged with the murder of Sheehan's mother, brother and sister at Castlerock, about twenty-eight miles from Cork. Seven years ago the bodies were discovered at the bottom of a well in the farm owned by Mrs. Sheehan, but it was only a few months ago that evidence was obtained implicating the prisoners, and one of them, William Sheehan, was followed to New Zealand and brought back in irons, while the other was arrested in Cork. Within the past few days a man named Duane, who was employed on the farm, made a startling confession. He was a witness of the three murders, but kept quiet lest he should be charged with complicity. On the evening of the murders Sheehan called his brother Tom into the stable and at once struck him a blow on the head with a 'griffau', an instrument resembling a cooper's adze, used in breaking lumpy mould after ploughing, and killed him instantly. Sheehan and Brown then entered the house where Mrs. Sheehan and her daughter Hannah were sitting by the fire. Sheehan struck his mother a murderous blow with the 'griffau', and threw the implement to Brown, who dealt Hannah a terrific blow. Neither of the women were killed by the blow, but the brutes completed their work by choking them to death. With Duane's assistance the bodies were removed to the stable, and the same night Duane, at Sheehan's orders, harnessed a horse to a cart and the bodies were taken to a disused well and thrown in. The two murderers proceeded to Brown's house, where a dance was in progress, in which the callous prisoners engaged.
