A joint report issued here by the labor department and the bureau of statistics estimated July unemployment at 244,000 persons and said 38 per cent—or 92,000—were between the ages of 14 and 19, most of them students in search of summer jobs.

Adult unemployment dropped to 182,000, down 5,000 from June and 18,000 below July of last year. Of these adults, 8,000 were over 65.

July unemployment represented 3.3 per cent of the labor force, compared to 3.5 per cent in June and 3.7 per cent in July, 1964.

After adjustment to discount seasonal factors, the jobless rate was 4.3 per cent. In June this key indicator stood at 4.5 per cent and in July of last year it was 4.9.

However, the adjusted rate had been as low as 3.9 per cent earlier in the year.

The United States unemployment rate, on a similarly adjusted basis, was 4.5 per cent in July.

Between June and July total Canadian unemployment declined by 18,000, about normal for the period, and the year-to-year drop was 21,000, also matching the normal pace.

Employment jumped by 202,000 in the month and 271,000 in the year with most of the gains occurring in the construction and service-producing industries. The report noted that the year-to-year increase in construction jobs was one of the largest on record but did not cite figures.

The teen-age job situation wasn't all dark. An estimated 290,000 youngsters found jobs during the month, some resulting from the heavy withdrawal of married women from the labor force that usually occurs between June and July.

Regional unemployment rates showed Quebec with the highest at 4.7 per cent, exceeding the Atlantic rate for the first time in many months.

The Atlantic region had 4.6 per cent of its labor force out of work, Ontario 2.4 per cent, the Prairies 1.9 and British Columbia 3.7. June figures were Atlantic and Quebec 4.9, Ontario 2.8, Prairies 1.8 and B.C. 4.2.

These regional rates are not adjusted for seasonal factors. A breakdown of the 244,000 unemployed showed that 100,000 had been hunting for jobs less than one month, another 81,000 for less than three months and 30,000 for four to six months.

"Hard core" unemployment—those out of work for seven months or more, was 33,000. This category was down 3,000 from June and 7,000 from July of last year.

Women, who parade about in such skimpy attire needn't be surprised if they are approached by a policeman, said the chief. First they will be warned. If they persist in disregarding the bylaw "necessary measures" will be taken. There have been complaints—and, indeed, verification by policemen themselves, said the chief. So the bylaw will be "rigorously enforced."

The police department has had warning circulars printed. Short-wearers, in short, will be handed these circulars.

QUEBEC CITY BANS SHORTS

QUEBEC (CP)—Ladies, if you wear shorts in Quebec City it's just like parking illegally. You'll get a ticket; at least a warning ticket.

In effect, that's the edict laid down Thursday by police chief Gerard Girard. He said police are starting a campaign against wearing shorts in the streets. A city bylaw backs him up.
